HAND HOOKED WOOL MATS

The early American art of hand hooking has been brilliantly revived in these chair mats. The black border and rich, multicolored center designs have been hand-hooked of soft, rugged wool. These mats, made just as they were two centuries ago by the Blue Ridge Mountain Folk, radiate homespun charm and down-to-earth comfort. In addition to being wonderfully decorative, these long wearing mats also provide excellent protection for chair seats. Both measure 15" across—please specify whether you want the ROUND or the SHAPED model. $3.35 ppd.

PETITS FOURS ROYALE
"The World's Most Precious Pastry"

May we send you with our compliments the most magnificent taste sensation of your life – a box of incomparable Petits-Fours Royale? Let us, for one mouth-watering moment, provide for you the supreme thrill of a zephyr-light pastry . . . fluffy, exotic layers with fresh fruit flavors baked right through – covered with purest chocolate.

For centuries these luscious candy-cakes were made only by bakers to the royal families of Europe. They were so delicate they had to be eaten dans le four ("in the oven") . . . so precious that it was said "only Queens and Angels could enjoy them – if they were not late for dinner"! Even today only Claridges of London, Maxim's of Paris and the few remaining great Continental maisons make them in the authentic way.

But now the heir of one of the great royal baking families has developed, in America, a petit four so pure in its ingredients, so balanced in its exquisite mix that it keeps its oven-fresh flavor for six months in your refrigerator. Made without any artificial preservatives whatever. Now you can serve like a Queen – always have on hand the world's most precious pastry.

• Send now for your FREE box of four; enclose 25¢ postage and packing. You may, if you wish, order boxes of 40 petits fours for only $3.00 each, now. You must be delighted or your payment refunded in 10 days. Give Petits Fours Royale to your gourmet friends! Write today!

IT'S YOUR HOUSE that forms the decoration on this new enamel-on-copper ash tray. Just send in a reasonably clear snapshot of your home, and it will be translated into a drawing (with the name of the house beneath it if you wish) on a forest green, blue or white background. 5" in diameter. $5.95 ppd. Holiday House, 110 Bellevue Theatre Bldg., Upper Montclair, New Jersey.

HOUSE AHOY! The most seaworthy marker we've found for a family of sailors is this house sign of cast white brass, highlighted to a two-tone statuary bronze finish. Completely weatherproof, the sailboat design is cast in full relief on both sides. Bracket and 5" x 15½" name plate are dull black. $15.95 ppd. Add 25¢ for each light-reflecting letter or number. Kraig Metal Products, 1506 W. Fulton St., Chicago 7.

YOU AUTO HAVE THIS in the glove compartment of your car, because when slipped between window and door frame, it holds your glass, bottle or beverage can and leaves both hands free for driving. Auto bottle holder also tends the baby's bottle or children's "coke," and saves upholstery from spills and stains. Metal leather-backed holders are $1 ppd. Maymac Co., 78-B W. Grand St., Mt. Vernon, N. Y.

One single KozaK Auto DRY-WASH Cloth will DRYWASH your nice car from 50 to 100 times. Will last a year at least, used every day. And you can enjoy driving a nice clean car from morning to night—day after day—with not over a couple of hose jobs a year, if even that. You can KozaK your car twice as quick and one Kozak in each hand. And it is only half the work. One hand rests while the other moves. Even seconds of resting time make it child's play to keep a car clean this way.

The 10 million KozaKs consumed over the past 30 years have saved their owners over half a billion dollars in needless wetwashing. And every KozaK is Guaranteed to be entirely satisfactory or money cheerfully refunded by air mail, and you do not have to return anything to get refund.

Beautiful 3 color Xmas wraps are free for the asking with your order. Mail your order with check or cash to KozaK, 263 S. Lyon St., Batavia, N. Y. Single KozaKs are $2. Three for $5, postpaid, will give an extra for a Xmas Gift to a man with a fine car.

from coast to coast more builders choose

SHEETROCK*

FIREPROOF GYPSUM WALLBOARD

than any other dry wall interior

National HOMES the nation's largest pre-fabricator of homes, has used SHEETROCK for years. Their newest home, the luxurious Ridgewood—as well as all other models—is available with SHEETROCK interiors through their local builders. Joints are concealed and "welded" by the PERF-A-TAPE* Joint System.

Built better for better living

An interior built with SHEETROCK means a home that's truly beautiful . . . wonderfully livable. Beautiful, because SHEETROCK creates smooth walls and ceilings that can be decorated as you please. Livable, because SHEETROCK makes walls and ceilings that are strong, durable—and, above all, safe: it's made with fireproof gypsum. With all these advantages, is it any wonder that more builders from coast to coast choose SHEETROCK—it's the best dry-wall that money can buy!

The Greatest Name in Building

*T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

The Ridgewood, National Homes' newest custom model, sells for about $20,000, plus lot. A three-bedroom house, it features G-E kitchen appliances.

VOTED Nº 1 by the world's largest builder of prefabricated homes...

In National Homes — and all across America — G.E. is voted Nº 1

J. R. Price, president of National Homes. His annual production: 30,000 houses.

Enthusiastic Mr. Price believes this efficient General Electric kitchen saves a woman many hours every day . . . hours she can devote to her children, husband or hobbies.

This G-E kitchen with colors of woodtone brown and white gives one idea of the varieties of color now available in all General Electric Major Appliances.

Specifically, G-E Mix-or-Match colors are now available in canary yellow, turquoise green, petal pink, cadet blue, woodtone brown and white.

Why did National Homes President Price choose G-E appliances? In addition to his own convictions and preferences, he took a cue from his public. (According to a recent survey, 55 out of every 100 women say they think General Electric makes the best home appliances.)

General Electric Company, Appliance Park, Louisville 1, Kentucky.

G-E Dishwasher . . . service for 8 at one loading. G.E.'s food waste disposer ends garbage worries.

Wash day is fun day with this G-E Washer-Dryer. Washes and dries, whatever the fabric, automatically.

Mildred Irby, AID, made this gracious room amazingly practical by using fabrics of Du Pont nylon.

A dream room . . . and a dream to care for

because every fabric is Du Pont Nylon

Every sleeping and waking hour is wonderfully carefree in this beautiful bedroom . . . thanks to Du Pont nylon. Light, airy curtains of nylon are easy to keep gloriously bright. Valances and bedspread of nylon damask are luxurious, yet ever so practical. The chaise and chair are upholstered in nylon tweed that invites rugged wear. And the reason the beautiful carpeting wears so valiantly, needs such little care is because it, too, is made of 100% Du Pont nylon. For your own dream rooms, look for beautiful, practical home fashions of Du Pont nylon in your favorite store.

NYLON TWEED . . . with all its beauty of color and texture . . . is wonderfully easy to care for and long-wearing. The word "tweed" got its name through a spelling error. In 1826, a London shipping clerk wrote "tweed" instead of "tweel" (Scottish for twill). The name caught on.

Powerful new plunger clears

in a jiffy!

Never again that sickening feeling when your toilet overflows.

Pat. Pending

Because ordinary plungers don't seat properly, they permit the compressed air and water to splash back. As a result, you not only have a mess on your hands, but you are losing the very pressure you need to clean out the obstruction.

With "Toilaflex"—expressly designed for toilets—no water or air can escape. The full pressure plows through the clogging mass and swishes it down . . . Can't miss!

'TOILAFLEX'

Toilet ALL-ANGLE Plunger

The unique accordion-action cup compresses at any angle, letting "Toilaflex" bend around and get right down into the trap opening. There, the over-sized chamber blasts twice the volume of compressed air, aimed directly at the obstruction. This pressure is trapped, because the "Toilaflex" patented tail is tapered to insure a snug, air-tight fit in toilets of any shape or size. Thus, the compressed air and water cannot escape, and must force its way through the clogging mass, breaking it up and washing it down the sewer.

GARDENS ARE FOR PEOPLE, and the most important people in your garden are you and your family. This is the revolutionary new approach toward garden planning taken by Thomas D. Church in his new book, GARDENS ARE FOR PEOPLE. Say you like flowers, dogs, swimming, weeding, seeding, tennis, shrubs, ferns, horses, ivy, acorns, oaks, and antique cars. Or, on the other hand, say you like something else; it's possible you might like an entirely different list of things. Whatever it is, your garden can be designed around your likes and the likes of those you love. ▪

GARDENS ARE FOR PEOPLE—even those who don't like garden work. Is your garden costing you dear in backaches? Maybe you should have more paving and decking and less weed area. There is so much information on low-maintenance gardens in the new Church book, that the book will make gardeners out of anti-gardeners.

GARDENS ARE FOR PEOPLE who have children. You can have a garden that Gesell, Ilg, and Dr. Spock all would approve of and still not have the children under foot at all times. Your garden can be a thing for your children to enjoy and not destroy.

GARDENS ARE FOR PEOPLE is for you if you want to:

- know how to manufacture a view for a small, flat, suburban lot;
- know what to do if your house has a picture window that puts you on view to passers-by;
- know where to place a swimming pool and how to get one at little cost;
- design and use fences and walls to give you more space for living;
- "borrow" pleasant things to look at without having to pay to maintain them;
- keep cattle out of your garden, and horses out of your swimming pool;
- make a deep, deep garden out of an 8' x 20' city yard;
- know where, what and how much to prune, and why;
- etc.

GARDENS ARE FOR PEOPLE has 250 pages and over 600 illustrations (many in color). Because you are a HOUSE BEAUTIFUL reader the book is yours for $8.95; the regular price is $10.00.

Chung-King's Chinese foods in Divider Packs have the benefit of a new canning technique which overcomes the unpleasant limpness that vegetables acquire in conventional canning of Chinese foods. The Divider Pack contains two cans: one for vegetables, one for sauce and other ingredients. Since vegetables for both the chop suey and chow mein are prepared and canned apart from the other ingredients, they're crisp to start with and remain that way because only brief cooking is required after contents of two cans are combined. Bean sprouts, mushrooms, bamboo shoots, water chestnuts, pimientos, celery and onions comprise the blended vegetables; this large assortment is in itself a taste asset.

Divider Packs afford a choice of chicken chow mein, beef chop suey or mushroom chow mein. All three are prepared from Cantonese recipes with very tasty results. The can containing the vegetables is taped to that containing sauce and other ingredients to keep them consolidated for shelf storage; their combined contents provide from two to four servings.

If you can't find these products locally, mail orders can be directed to Gristede's, 55 E. 59th St., New York City. Six Divider Packs, $6.30 plus shipping cost.

Chung-King has recently introduced a frozen Cantonese dinner which provides two egg rolls, chicken-almond chop suey and rice. You'll have to rely on a local source for this product.

lumbian product in point here, has a flavor distinctively different from blended-coffee products, yet that difference is verbally undefinable. Whether it will give you pleasure equal to my own, or even prove to your liking, I guess, rests with first-hand tasting.

So far as prime quality is concerned, you'll certainly find that in this product. For one thing, the coffee is grown on mountain slopes whose high altitudes provide the low temperatures of the tropic zone so important to exacting cultivation; for another thing, Columbia's National Federation of Coffee Growers selects only the cream of the crop for export.

If local food shops can't supply this product, it's obtainable by mail from Fraser-Morris, 872 Madison Ave., New York City at $1.25 a can exclusive of postage.

From this shop you can also obtain a prune product without peer, Bee-Ritchie California Pitted Prunes. Their size is giant, their flavor superb and even though you keep them for weeks they remain plump and tender. For added pleasure, they come ready-pitted. I'm told by the food trade that once a prune devotee becomes acquainted with this exceptional brand, he will settle for nothing less, and I don't wonder. They are available in 1- or 2-pound packs for $1.19 and $2.19. (Pre-pitting makes the prune-count per pound some 50% greater than usual.)

The West Coast's deep-sea Dungeness crab meat has a distinctive flavor and sweetness that make it a high-ranking favorite in the crab-meat realm. Although fresh Dungeness crab meat is virtually unobtainable beyond West Coast areas, an exceptional canned pack is available to all from Jeanne-Rock of Seattle. The canning procedures they use in vacuum-packing the product preserve the fresh, natural flavor of the crab as well as its firm, succulent texture. These are matters in which the packers take considerable pride, and justifiably so. One available pack provides 100% leg-meat crab; a second which they call "combination crab meat" contains body meat along with claws.

Pending national distribution, Jeanne-Rock are purveying these products directly to the consumer by mail shipment in 12-can cases. The case-lot cost (6½ ounce cans) for 100% leg-meat crab is $12.50; on combination crab, $10, postpaid. A mixed sampler containing these two products, plus barbecued oysters, barbecued salmon, minced razor clams, flaked kippered sturgeon, smoked crab legs, steamed Pacific oysters, Blueback salmon and Albacore tuna is available for $9.40. The ordering address is P. O. Box 4002, Interbay Station, Seattle 99, Washington.

The fine fruitcake produced by Love's of Honolulu brings together two paradoxical factors: a traditional Scotch recipe and tropical nuts and fruits native to Hawaii. The recipe was transported from Scotland to Hawaii when the bakery's founder migrated many years ago. Expediency obviously prompted the use of nuts and fruits available in his adopted country. Love's cake contains 84% fruits and nuts; batterwise, it's butter rich and delicately spiced. Supplied in a scenic tin, 2 pounds gross, at a $4.50 postpaid price, by Love's, Honolulu, Hawaii. Shipping distance makes early ordering advisable.

Christmas gift lists are in the offing and by way of an interesting gift suggestion, I bring to your attention the delicacies produced by Honolulu's Halekulani Hotel. One is an exotic preserve made from the poha berry, called Hawaii's gooseberry but taste-wise elusively like the cherry (73¢). Jelly produced from passion fruit, natively known as lilikoi, is refreshingly tangy and rich in fresh-fruit flavor (68¢). Halekulani pineapple chutney made with small pineapple fingers, macadamia nuts and raisins is flavorfully accented with a piquant blend of vinegar and brown sugar and discernable ginger (62¢). You can also obtain pickled pineapple in which the rich-flavored fruit is aromatically accented with spices and whole cloves (49¢); also a jam in which a blend of pineapple and the melon-like papaya produce an intriguing product (47¢). Red pepper jelly is a hearty, piquant meat accompaniment in which lurks unexpected "fire" (73¢). In the relish category, an exotic green tomato piccalilli is produced from tiny, wild mountain tomatoes blended with horseradish, cloves, cinnamon.

Pork sausage that, to my way of thinking, has special merit came my way from Neuhoff's in Texas. The product, paradoxically, is called Tennessee Farm Sausage. I deduced from information at hand that the old family recipe used is of Tennessee origin and got to Texas as a result of the family's migration. Be that as it may, their recipe produces meaty, delicately flavored sausage that retains its juices and bulk during cooking.

To achieve this characteristic, Neuhoff's grinds the various meats while still warm; spices and seasonings are incorporated with the meat before chilling to assure their uniform and thorough absorption. Hams, tenderloins and other choice hog cuts provide the major part of the prime quality sausage and this fact is deliciously manifested in the end product. Pork meat and seasonings are the sole ingredients.

Shipments are made in dry ice containers to insure initial freshness and flavor on arrival at destination. A box of six 1-pound sacks costs $5.85 postpaid. To obtain this sausage, order from Neuhoff Brothers, Dallas, Texas.

Novel prepared mixes for Old South delicacies came to my attention recently and proved to be very worth while. both the taste and the texture.

Spoon bread is as appropriate as Yorkshire pudding with roast beef; it is a delicious side dish, too, with fried chicken, baked ham or a cold-meat plate. For breakfast, you sauté chilled, sliced spoon bread until golden brown; served with bacon and eggs or just bacon or sausage, you've got yourself wonderfully tasty fare for a Sunday morning repast.

The Roanoke miller who created and produces this mix makes a point of the fact that the cornmeal used is of a type necessary for an authentic, airy spoon bread. Although not yet available nationally, the product is available directly from the millers, Lindsey-Robinson & Co., Roanoke, Va., at a postpaid price of $4.68 for 12 packages; 6-package shipment can also be had.

From Jane Jaye Shop in Louisiana you can get a prepared mix for hush puppies, another Old South delicacy. Should you be uninformed as to what hush puppies are, they're pones made with yellow cornmeal which you deep-fry for serving. The most traditional use seems to be with fried fish.

A story accompanying the mix tells how, traditionally, hush puppies were fried in the same iron pot that held the fish. These pones have since then apparently become a commonly used accompaniment for pork chops and such things as baked ham or bacon and eggs. The recipe used for the mix is said to be of Tallahasee, Florida, origin and authentically "Deep South," even to the use of water-ground cornmeal. Onion is the dominant flavoring ingredient and spices subtly manifest themselves by way of taste-enriching ingredients.

A prepared mix for making chicken-flavored dumplings is also supplied by the Jane Jaye Shop. It produces feather-light dumplings. There's a wheat flour base flavorfully enriched with chicken fat, celery, parsley and turmeric. As with the hush-puppy mix, water is the only ingredient you supply.

Four packages of either of these Old Southern Tallahasee products products can be had for $2 postpaid. The shop's address is P.O. Box 661, Hammond, Louisiana.

Opera—sight unseen

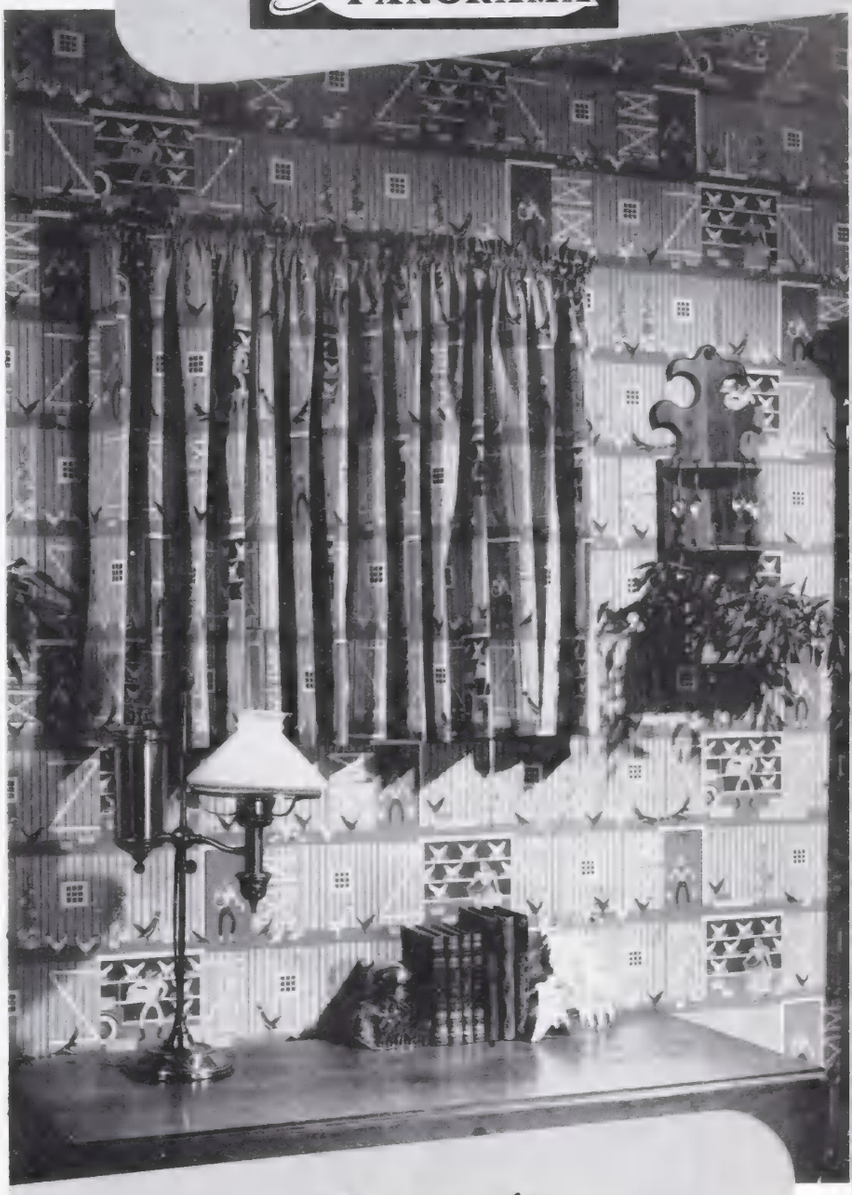
By VINCENT SHEEAN

Author, journalist, lecturer and long an amateur musician, Mr. Sheean lets the opera house come to him. Here he tells you why

An opera house is an abode of wonder for me, and always will be. Yet I have found out that some of the most wonderful things it contains are put there by the imagination of the audience, and the proof is that you can do it at home. I have done so. Hundreds of miles away from the Metropolitan I have performed whole works for myself on the magic sound-box called phonograph or gramophone, and once you get used to this kind of performance, it yields delights which even the actual opera itself cannot always give.

There exists somewhere a short story—I have read it but cannot remember who wrote it—about two old men in Maine who were cronies and spent their evenings playing opera records on a rather primitive machine. They talked to each other very little, but they listened together countless times. Once when they were both very antique, the son or nephew or daughter of one of them invited him to Boston for a week when the Metropolitan Opera was playing there. The old man saw an opera for the first time in his life, and it was one of his favorites, Aïda or Tristan or something of similar power. He sent a message, and it seems to me that it was a telegram, extravagant though that may seem, to his crony in the Maine fishing village. It said: "Have seen opera. You stick to our sound-box."

He was, of course, disillusioned. To him some essential beauty was gone when he saw human beings, too often neither young nor beautiful, performing music he had loved.



It happens rather often to a great many people. It happens rather often to actors. Among my own acquaintances I have some friends who know and love the music of the operas but cannot endure sitting through a performance in the opera house. One of these, a famous and beautiful Anglo-American actress, was obliged to go to an opera one night and I saw her afterward. She had suffered extremely. She said: "There isn't any excuse for it. Nobody should look and dress like that woman. It ought to be forbidden by law. Why do they all behave as they do?"

She was suffering from the rediscovery of a sad old secret, which is that singers who can manage difficult music are very often unable to do anything else. Richard Wagner found this out innumerable times during his long and painful experience with singers. He spent about as much time on singers as he did composing his immense works. He used to teach them the music note by note, word by word, explaining to them every significance and actually showing them, by voice and action, what he wanted them to do. And yet we have the feeling when we read his letters that he never really found a singer who could fully express what he intended.

WITH the other giant of opera, Giuseppe Verdi, we find exactly the same melancholy truth. Verdi understood vocalism about as well as any composer ever did, and all his music sings—it never plods or mumbles. Yet he could not achieve perfect expression through the living bodies of the singers assigned to him. He came near it a few times, especially in Otello and Falstaff, but the deep dissatisfaction of the composer with the interpreter runs through his whole career from the earliest days to the triumphant finish.

And how could it be otherwise? The heroes and heroines of operatic stories (usually sopranos and tenors) are generally supposed to be very young. They are the fifteen-year-old Siegfried, the sixteen-year-old Isolde, the Ethiopian girl Aïda. And yet great music is so very hard to sing for a whole evening that a man or a woman who can do it is usually the product of long, arduous training. This makes all singers mature by the time they get to the big, exciting roles, the ones everybody wants to hear.

A girl might be exquisite in a small part and yet lack the sheer physical force and stamina to go through a whole evening in a big one. It takes enormous strength and a kind of physical apparatus that can be built up only through years of hard work. Then what? The diaphragm expands, yes, but so does everything else, and we have what we have—heroes and heroines who bear no resemblance to the creatures they are supposed to represent.

When you give yourself a performance on the old sound-box you have none of these things to contend with. You can give your Isolde the face and figure of your dreams. Best of all, you really hear the music, every bit of it, as you practically never can hear it in an opera house. You can, if you wish, follow every note with the score in front of you, thus acquiring a familiarity with the works themselves which a whole lifetime of opera-going would not confer.

AND you also make some rather startling discoveries on the other side of the balance sheet—it isn't all roses and honey. For instance, a soprano can cheat like anything in the opera house in certain very difficult passages. Two examples come to mind, one being Donna Anna in Don Giovanni and the other Brünnhilde in Götterdämmerung. If the soprano singing Anna does not get in every note and every word, it passes unperceived in the opera house. Not so in the sound-box. I actually possess records of both of these heroic declamations in which the cheating, if you take the trouble to follow variety of singers and conductors and all the mythical heroes and heroines just as his own dreams envisioned them. Nobody ever needed the resources of the gramophone more than that unfortunate young King. He never would have had to jump into the lake.

SO, WHEN we deplore so much of our modern environment, as we all do, even to the extent of regretting some of our scientific achievements, let us give one slight but grateful purr for the wonders of the phonograph. It has not made the world any smaller; other inventions have attended to that; but it has made another world more accessible. That is the world of the composer's imagination, the drama expressed in music, the dear and often foolish but very grand world of opera.

How to leave home and like it

By MARION GOUGH

Autumn in New York, as every New Yorker instinctively knows, is the time to be there. Because this is the season when things start happening, the city seems to have waked up, looking fresh and clean and good-humored, and the shops, full of new things, begin to have a specially scintillating glamour. This is the time of openings: theaters, fashion shows, concerts (Carnegie Hall opens with the New York Philharmonic on October 20), the Rodeo (Madison Square Garden, September 28 through October 16), horse racing (Belmont Park, until October 21; Jamaica from October 22 to November 15). It's the time to see the UN in full swing (General Assembly convenes on September 20), to see the chrysanthemums in Rockefeller Center (September 29 to October 31) and watch the season's first skaters whirling around the famous ice rink. These are days as golden as the trees in Central Park, as dazzling as the sunset that flames across the Hudson and gilds skyscraper window panes with fire. You see this best from the river, on a round-Manhattan boat or a Staten Island ferry. "ETERNAL VIGILANCE IS THE PRICE OF LIBERTY" . . . DEFEND THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

The high style of being yourself

People are more alike than unlike, but it is their differences that make them interesting.

Today, more strongly than ever, it seems, all social pressures are urging us toward greater conformity in what we wear and how we live, in what we eat and what we do.

More and more people, however, have discovered that they can best resist these pressures by cultivating their differences, by encouraging every impulse toward self-expression in the clothes they select, in the homes they occupy, in the ways they have chosen to live.

As a fine result, they have arrived at a distinction and originality which might be called high style.

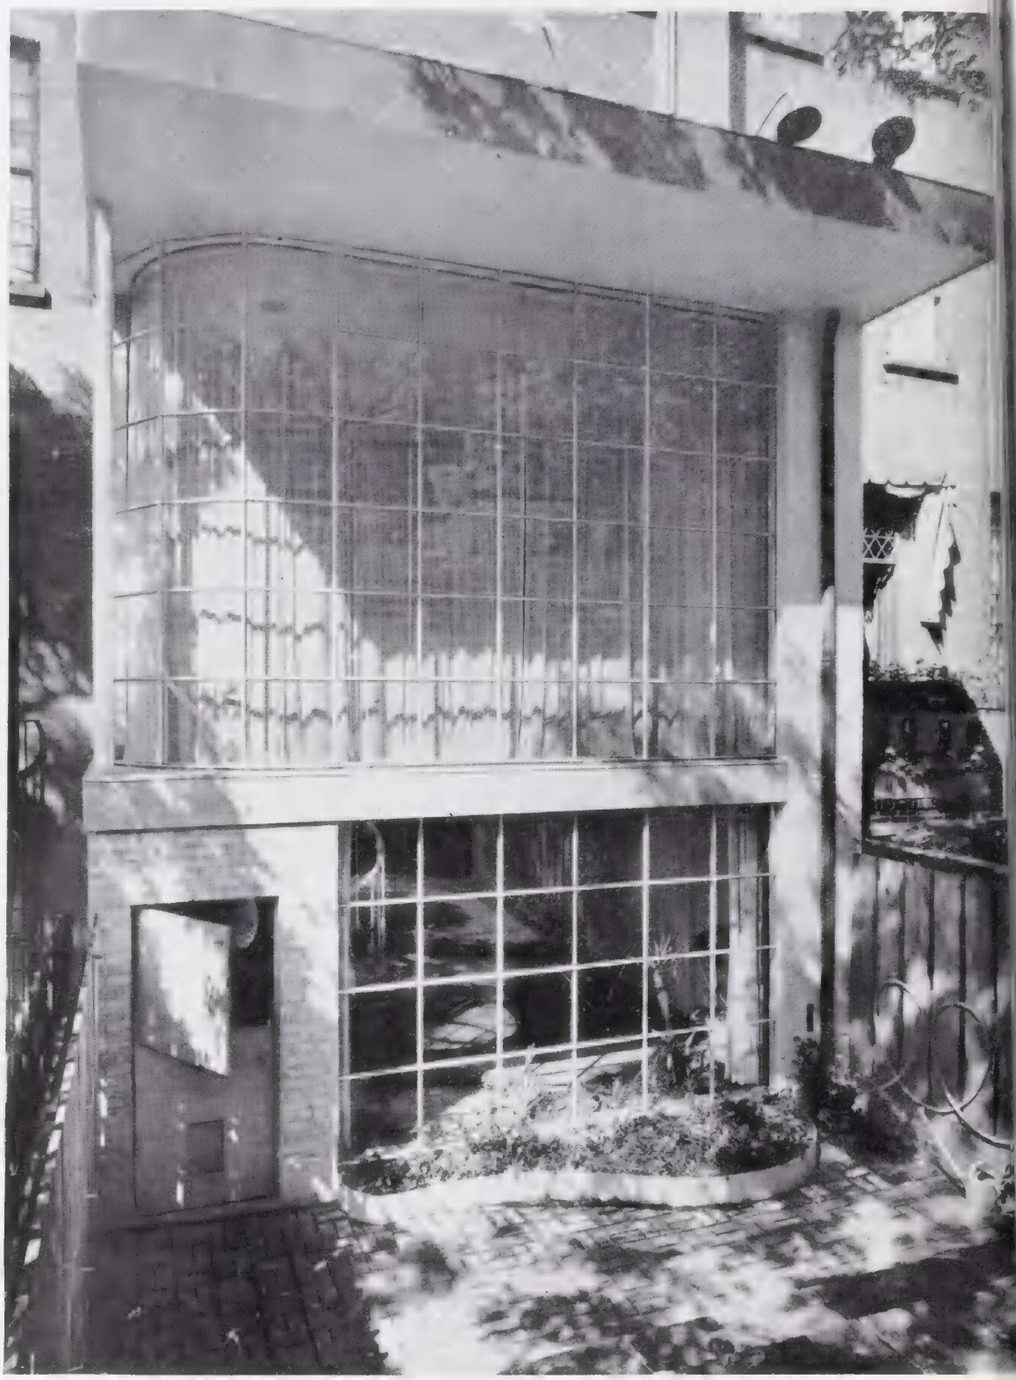
On the following 30 pages, you can see for yourself how they have achieved this quality in their homes . . .

The Distinction of being different

From the deserts of the Southwest to the woodlands of New England, homes are rising with the rich character and individuality of those who have built and furnished them. Everywhere across the country, people are achieving the high quality of distinction by daring to be different. Each in his own way and each with the solution to his own needs, they are creating homes that are fully expressive of the breadth and variety of the vast continent of America itself.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

The Arizona desert and its plants come right up to the door of the Reynard residence, which is as personal as it is appropriate to the region it occupies. With all the charm of colonial Spanish architecture, it is a free and individual blend of old English fireplace and furniture with a ceiling of hand-hewn timbers from an abandoned mine, a floor of polished clay tile, and today's feeling of openness and space.



RICHARD GARRISON

An old barn in Connecticut has here become the setting for a thoroughly modern interior, which still spells, in its own independent manner, the spirit of rural New England. By daring to combine the rustic with the sophisticated, decorator T. H. Robsjohn-Gibbings has arrived at a supremely stylish effect. The upholstery fabric is green and yellow sailcloth; the rug is hemp.

Even an old, New York brownstone house, barely distinguishable from its next row neighbor, can be remodeled into a highly individualized home, once the imagination is let loose to work out personal solutions. Here architect George Kosmak employed the techniques of modern architecture to let in light, air and space. Above right, you see rear of house with garden and terrace. Above left, stairwell corner of living room on first floor; right, corner of ground-floor dining room with garden door behind.

In California, perhaps more than anywhere in America, people are encouraged on all sides to cultivate their differences for the distinction that results. Here architect Morgan Stedman has designed a novel, two-story entrance foyer and stairhall for the Cecil Whitebone residence. Besides opening up an otherwise darkened space, it seems to promise new, delightful surprises within.

MAYNARD PARKER

EVERYTHING SEEMED PART OF EVERYTHING ELSE. THE PEBBLES ON THE ROOF, THE TREES CLOSE TO THE HOUSE

This is a personal report. There seems no better way to tell on these pages the story of the house, which we saw for the first time several years ago.

It was at the end of a long road, clearly marked Private. We had phoned ahead for permission to see it. And although it was given, when we arrived, we felt somewhat like intruders. We were intruders. I felt it then. I know it now.

The path from the road curved down to the house, so we saw the roof first. Or was it the trees and the slope and the bay? Or did we see everything at the same time, because everything seemed part of everything else? The roof had a scattering of pebbles from the beach below. The trees came close to the house, as if with confidence in a fellow creature. The house was not cut into the steep slope. It rested on it lightly, yet securely. It was part of the site, of the horizontal sky, of the earth, of the live oaks and the eucalyptus trees.

It was part of the two individuals who had built it. A man and his wife.

We visited the house. We said it was one of the finest we had ever seen. We said we thought our readers might think so too. We said our readers would not insist on knowing where it was or who they were. We said we would guarantee them complete anonymity, if they would let us publish it. We said it might inspire others to build a house with the same courage, freedom and individuality.

EZRA STOLLER

IT WAS PART OF THE SITE OF THE HORIZONTAL SKY, OF THE EARTH, OF THE OAKS AND THE EUCALYPTUS

Since then I have returned more than once, and each time their house seems finer than I remembered. The man and the woman who live in it, as well. I no longer separate the three of them. I no longer want to. We have talked many suns across the sky—he and I, that is; she is usually out in the garden with her man-size pick. But he speaks for both of them, or rather the three of them, for he certainly speaks for the house.

He is not, thank the gods, an average man. He is, however, a completely normal one. He helps me understand a friend's remark that "only the normal is interesting." He might even permit me to say that he is an artist, which is simply to say that he is like all men. (Please turn the page) only more so. He sees what we all sense. He has spent his life investigating the forms and relations of the shapes and objects that affect us all, however unconscious we might be of the effect.

In other words, his philosophy of what a house should be is probably the unvoiced attitude of many, perhaps most, of us. Not word for word, of course; not even room for room. Here are his answers to my many questions:

What prompted you to build this house?

A simple answer, he replied, would be to say my wife and I function better in pleasant surroundings and with plenty of push buttons. Ours is a combination of house and studio. I do creative work and it is hard work. I wished to make it easier. My wife's work is partly to run our home, and we wished to make her work easier. So, this house was designed to help us both in our work. We are active people, but we are not inclined to labor at living.

Perhaps I can help explain why we built this house by telling you about the kitchen. In a house, we believe, daily tasks are of prime importance. They should be made simple, easy and pleasant, especially in the kitchen—the workshop of the home. For example, my wife loves her garden, so in the kitchen she has a sweep of the garden running to the base of the window. In contrast, we have a simple, 21-foot, stainless steel counter with sink, garbage disposal, dish washer, 4-burner electric stove, switches, plugs, two ovens, and so on—all without one protrusion. This makes work easier, as you can see in the pictures shown. Directly behind are 15 feet of closets over 6 feet high, with 5 elegant Congo ebony doors, containing dishes and food. Opposite the stove is a two-door stainless steel refrigerator. To us, this room is extremely functional and perfectly in character with the entire house. It is good designing.

THE IRREGULAR FORMS IN THE GARDEN MEET THE LONG SLEEK STAINLESS-STEEL KITCHEN COUNTER SURROUNDED

Why is your house so spread out?

Let me answer in a roundabout way: Our house, we believe, is first, a shelter and second, a personal thing. It is a product of its site, the desire and the habits of two persons who live in it. The northwest end is for my work; the southeast for sleeping; the middle for eating and relaxing. The living room between faces south—it's cozy and warm. This was predetermined because of our personal habits. (This is the kind of considerations that make a house work for you.) Our house is also related to the site. It all came together in the planning stage. In the winter, the sun streams half-way across the rooms through the upper clerestories. We view trees, mountains and water. We sun ourselves on the adjacent 80 by 9 foot cantilevered deck. You see, our house is the result of all the many things we wanted it to do for us.

How were site and dwelling so well integrated?

To integrate a house with its site is not to imitate the site! Our house is all right angles; on the other hand, nature outdoors is a series of free forms. Each complements the other and both are of equal importance. The outside redwood is unpainted and a clear seal was applied after the wood had weathered naturally. This related the house and the site in color. Careful planning related it in form, as you can see by the interlocking horizontal forms extending to the land in two directions. No trees and little earth were removed. As my wife has said, "You don't buy a site you love and then wreck it with a bulldozer."

How do you explain the interesting forms?

Simple shapes, correct proportions and area distribution are very important to us, so we insisted on them for our house. It was especially called for at this site, where the contour, trees and rocks are active, moving shapes that are constantly in view as (Please turn the page) you circulate through the house. They are always changing in texture, color and light. If the inside were as busy, you would have no rest-space or focus on anything. Everything would be jittery, and we would feel jittery ourselves.

We tire of monotony, so we try to control it. Our house has a generous proportion of glass. There are many sliding screens of woven redwood and hanging accordion doors of jenisero. This enables us to have selection. In a matter of seconds we change the "composition" by cutting off the garden with a new wall texture, or cutting off the water view with still another, or having one without the other, or by having and enjoying both.

I might say, too, that the furniture was as carefully designed and selected as any detail of the architecture. We felt that the good in most contemporary houses is immediately destroyed by the furnishings used. This house has no paint, curtains or carpets, no light stands, light cords or bric-a-brac. Almost everything is built-in; there is nothing without a valid reason. There is nothing we do not find use for, functionally or esthetically.

Do you think these photographs explain your house?

Our house is hard to picture. You need to experience it, to get the correct indoor-outdoor relationship, to see the play of the charcoal-gray Congo ebony against the rough granite fireplace—the severe natural redwood ceiling and walls against the fine texture of the eucalyptus, oak or cypress leaves, or against the "green wall" of the garden outside the studio and kitchen. This was a carefully planned contrast of one texture with another, of the color harmonies between nature outdoors and the color of the house indoors.

How do you explain the bathroom?

We dress in the bathroom. But drawers and hanging space are accessible from either bath or bedroom. If you find our bathroom "handsome," perhaps it is because of its wall of dark-gray concrete with the visible imprint of the rough-textured wooden forms and because of the 20-foot, two-basin counter with stones from our own beach set into it. Behind you, as you look at the counter, are four 3′ by 6′ sliding doors of the same charcoal-gray Congo ebony which conceal the clothes closets. Light from the running, overhead skylights filters through an oak above and gives a pleasant feeling to the color combination of beach stones, gray concrete, ebony, redwood and dark concrete floor. This interplay of colors and textures was a basic design factor in our house. They were carefully planned to create unequal but balanced areas.

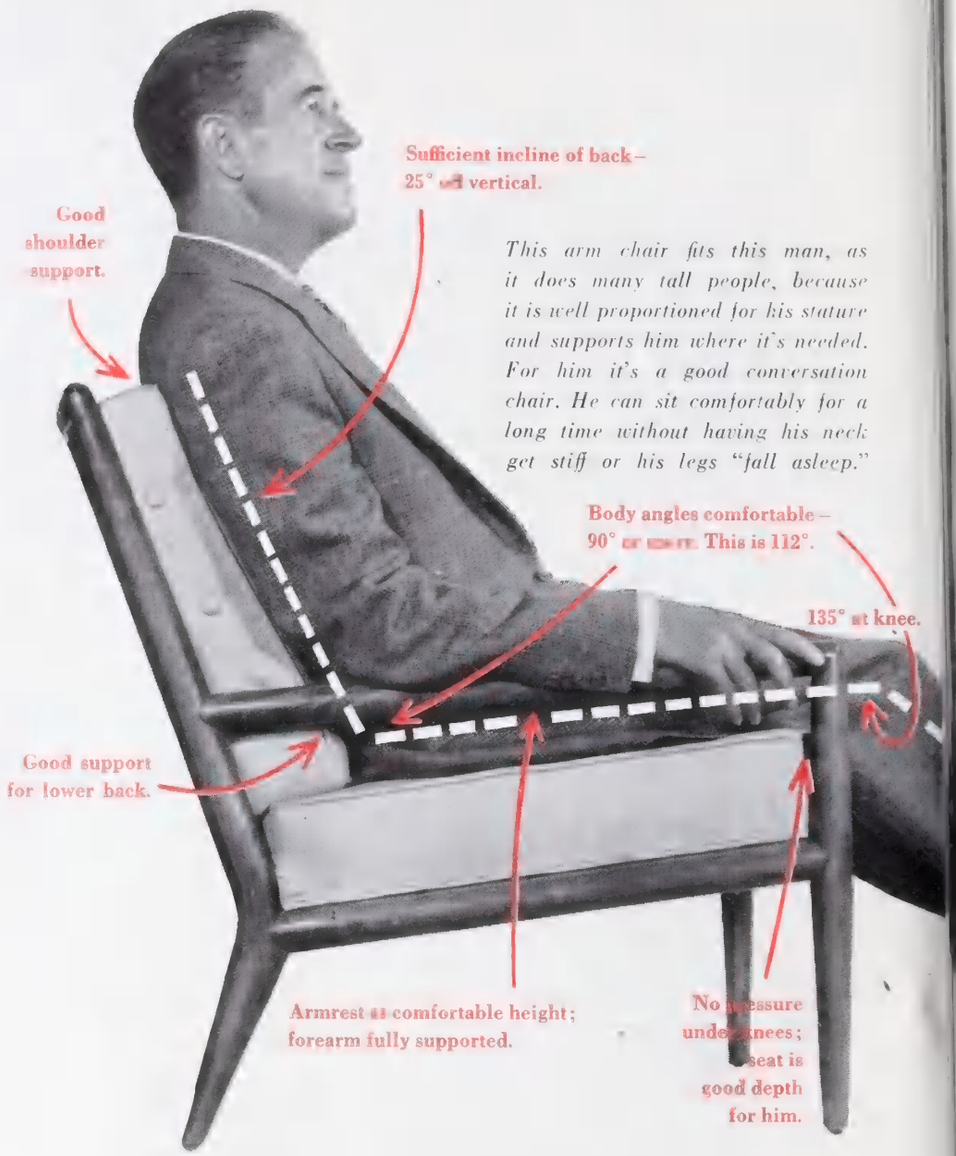
Would you explain the bedroom?

We don't sleep on the floor, despite the Japanese mats! Part of the function of our bedroom is psychological, since we enjoy certain Oriental things. (My wife has an unusually fine collection of beautiful Japanese fabrics.)

Our beds roll out of sight during the day, as you can see in the picture opposite. There is no "furniture" in this room, because we use it only for sleeping. The Japanese (tatami) mats are recessed in the floors. They are two inches thick: their compressed straw affords good insulation and nice resiliency. We also like the pattern in the Shoji screens when the eastern light hits them in the morning. It is the first thing we see when we awake. [See top of page.]



Our bedroom may be only for us. But so is our house.

What is the basic plan of your house?

I suppose we might have started with this question. . . . We are people, I think, with somewhat (Turn to page 248)

A physician who has spent 15 years in research on muscular pain and who serves as consultant to designers of industrial seating, tells what a chair should do to make sitting a safe, comfortable, restful procedure

By JANET TRAVELL, M.D.
Associate Professor of Clinical Pharmacology, Cornell University Medical College

This arm chair fits this man, as it does many tall people, because it is well proportioned for his stature and supports him where it's needed. For him it's a good conversation chair. He can sit comfortably for a long time without having his neck get stiff or his legs "fall asleep."

CHAIRS are a personal thing

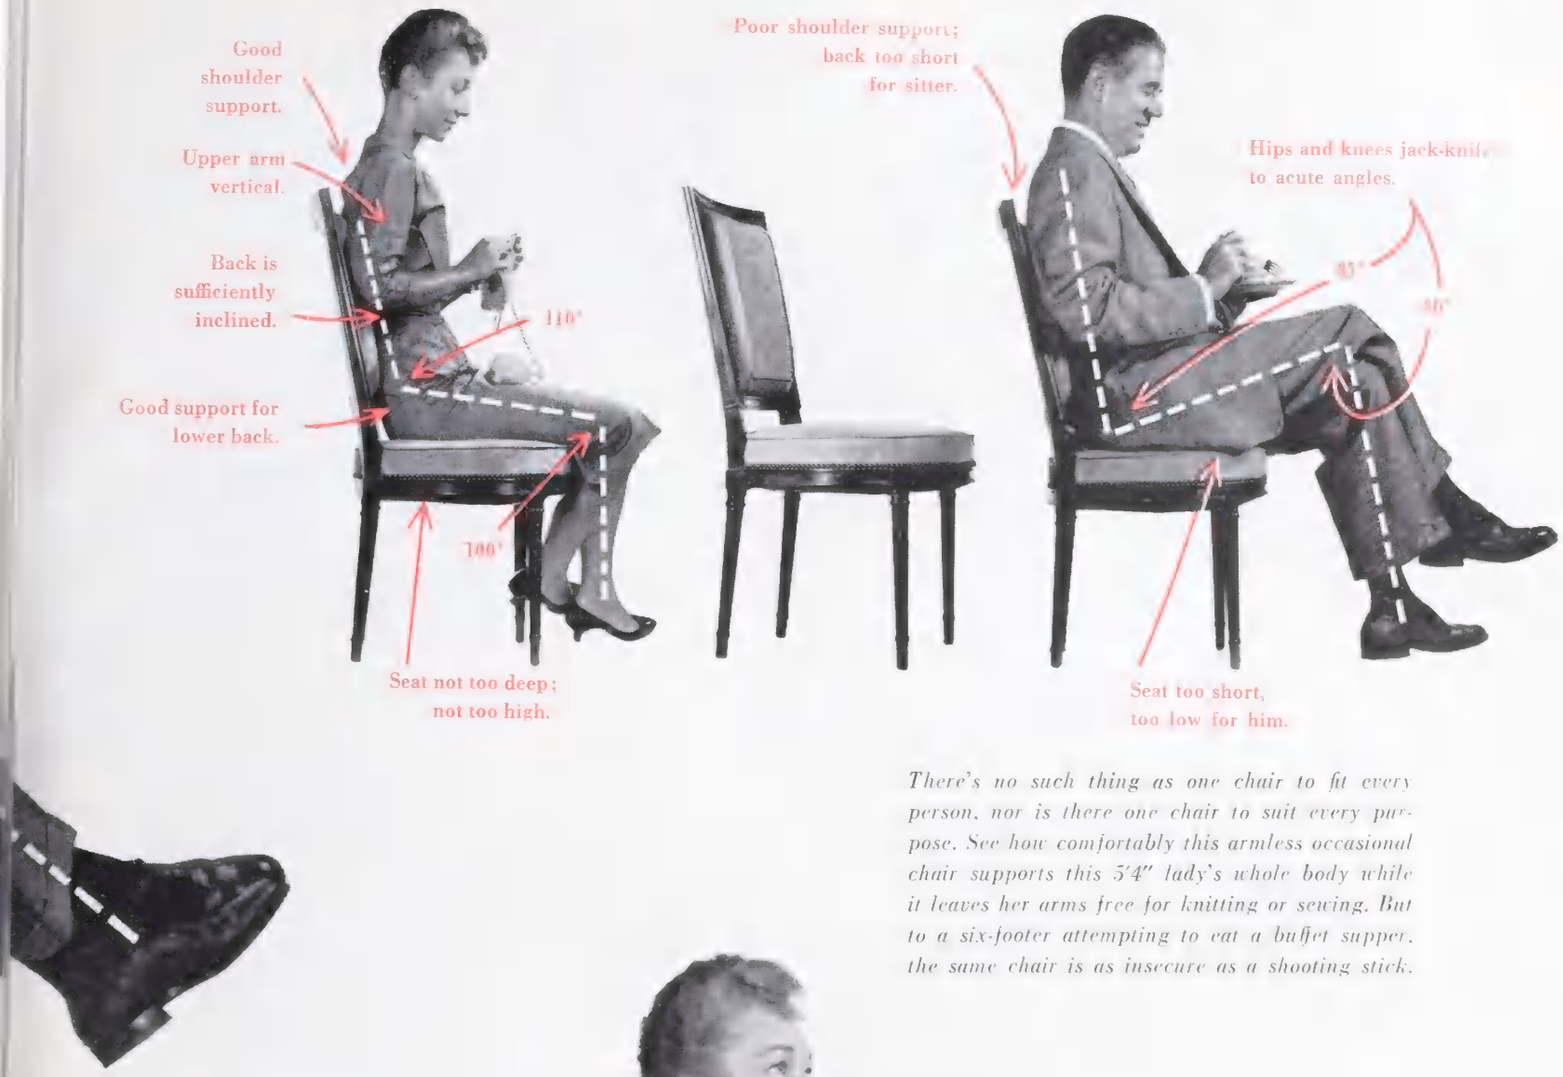
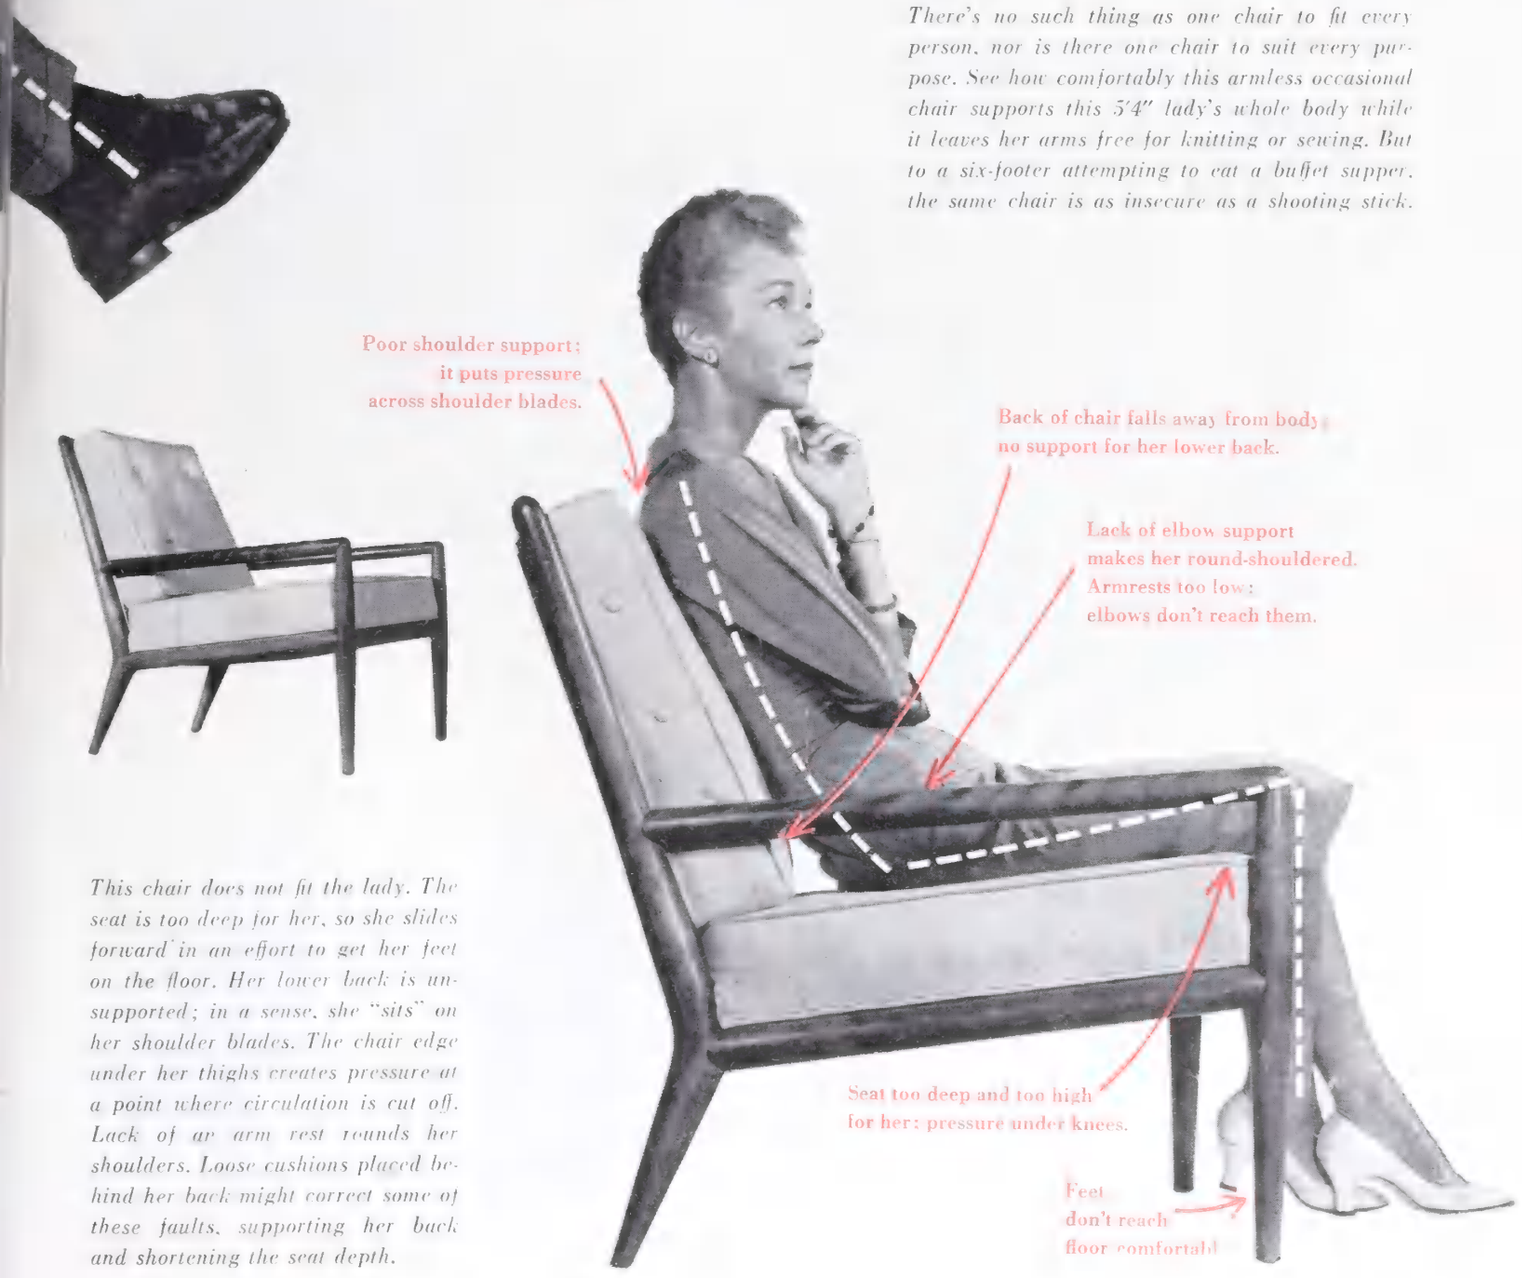
You wouldn't dream of buying shoes that don't fit you. You wouldn't want to sleep in a bed that's too short. But have you ever stopped to consider whether the chairs you sit in are right for you?



Think how much of your time you spend sitting! Yet it's my conclusion from years of study that one can go into most homes and not find a single chair that's properly designed to support the framework of the human body that's sitting in it.

There are vast numbers of people who suffer from muscular pain. I find that one of the major reasons for these painful states is poor seating design. I'm not talking about beauty of design. That's important, too, of course. I'm talking about what happens to the muscles and joints in your back, arms, legs, neck and shoulders when you sit reading, writing, talking, sewing, playing cards or looking at television for hours in a chair or sofa with angles and proportions which violate the principles of human physiology.



How many times have you sat at a bridge game, in the movies or as a guest in someone's home, and twisted and turned to find a position in which you could be comfortable? When the chair or sofa doesn't fit you, that's what you have to do to find some support for the parts of your body that need it.

You may have the wrong idea about the sort of chair to relax in. Most people think of comfort as implying something soft and yielding that gives way to the contours of the body. They reject the idea of their bony framework being held up and want only to sink into soft, downy cushions.

The truth is that the more a chair is to be used for relaxing, the more important it is to have your body held in shape by that chair. (Please turn the page)

There's no such thing as one chair to fit every person, nor is there one chair to suit every purpose. See how comfortably this armless occasional chair supports this 5'4" lady's whole body while it leaves her arms free for knitting or sewing. But to a six-footer attempting to eat a buffet supper, the same chair is as insecure as a shooting stick.

This chair does not fit the lady. The seat is too deep for her, so she slides forward in an effort to get her feet on the floor. Her lower back is unsupported; in a sense, she "sits" on her shoulder blades. The chair edge under her thighs creates pressure at a point where circulation is cut off. Lack of an arm rest rounds her shoulders. Loose cushions placed behind her back might correct some of these faults, supporting her back and shortening the seat depth.

If the chair doesn't provide the right amount of support at the right places, the effect is like sleeping in sand. At first it feels wonderful, but then the sand begins to ooze out from under you letting the body sag and gradually straining joints, ligaments and muscles. Many people now realize that sleeping on too-soft beds gives them backaches, but they haven't waked up as yet to the ill effects of too-soft chairs.

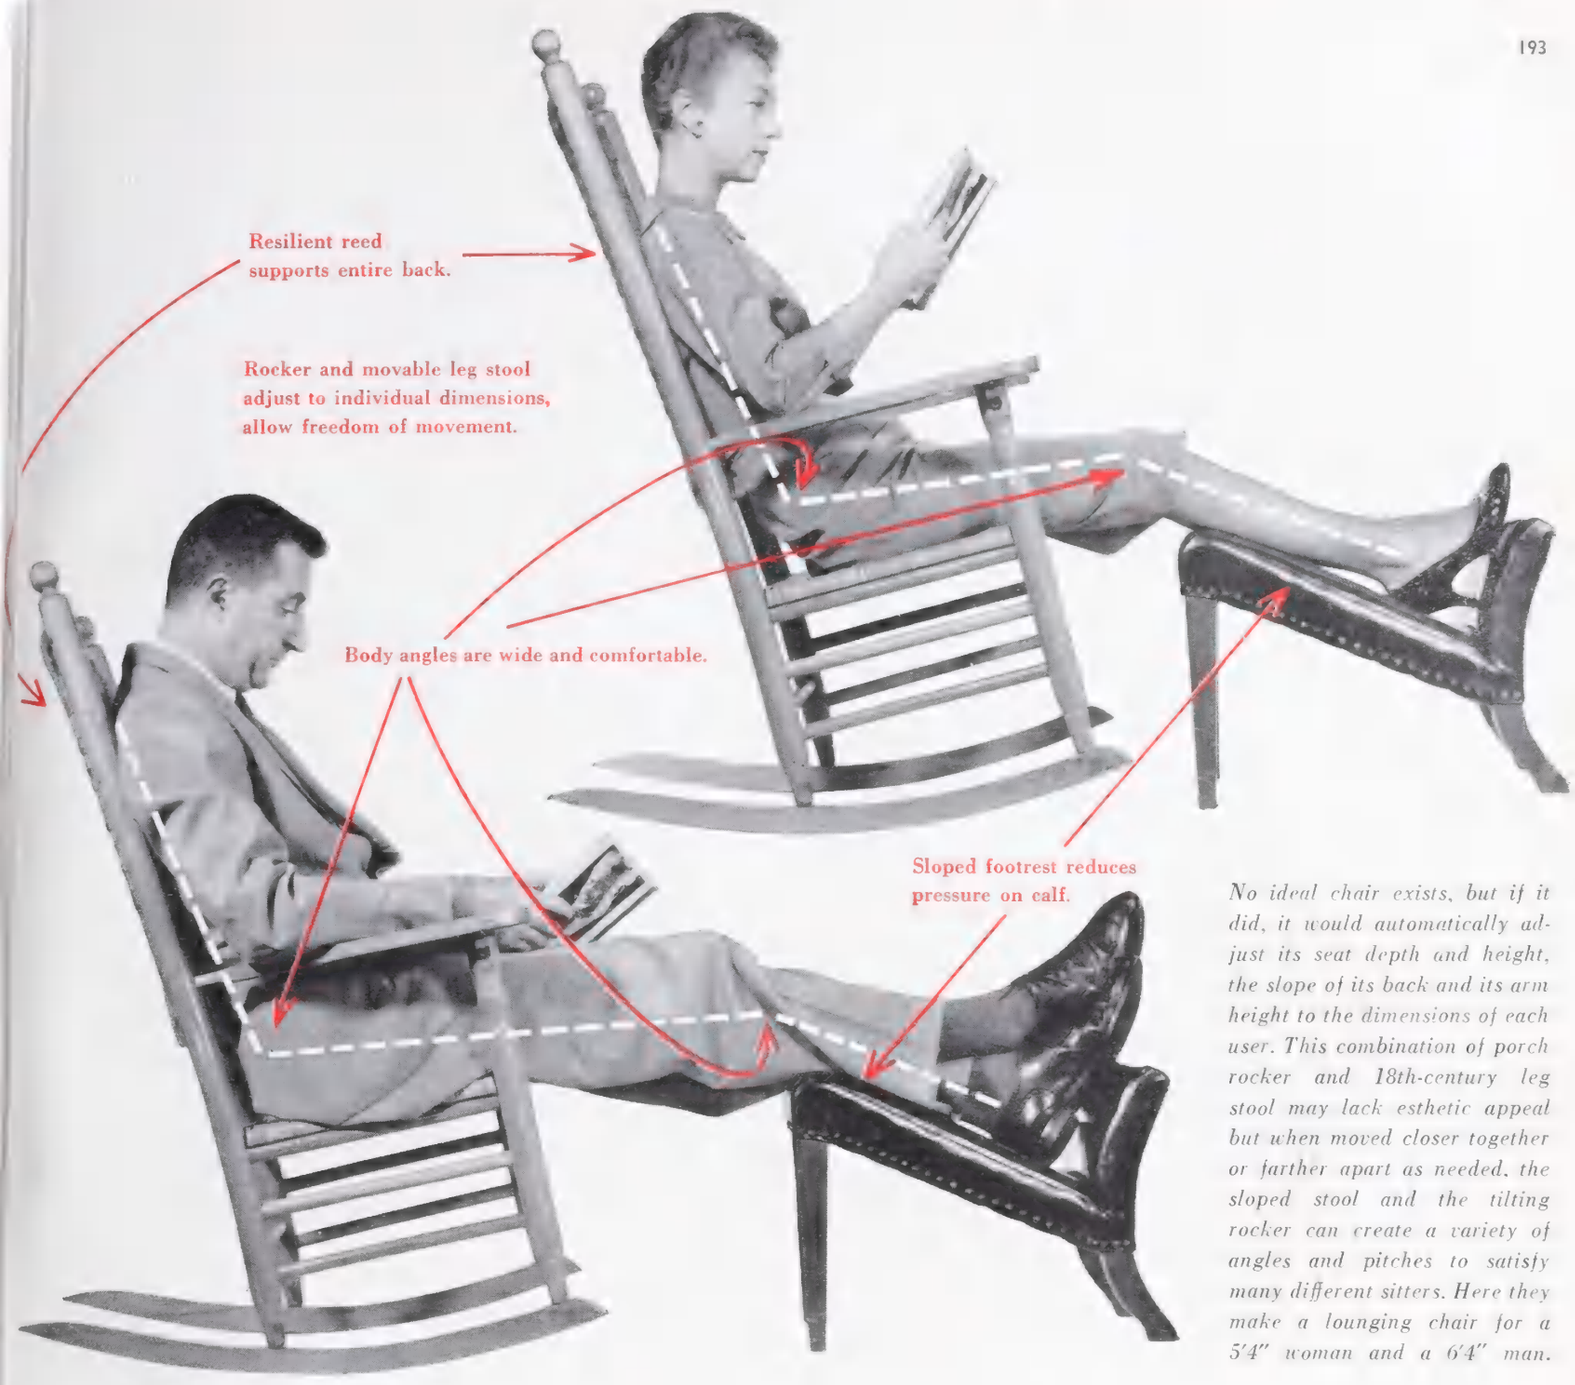
When I say that your body should be held correctly, I don't mean immobilized. Some body-shaped reclining chairs aim at holding your body completely and so letting your muscles relax fully. However, I personally do not like this type of fixed angle chair, which tilts all in one piece, because you can't shift your position much, turn on one side, straighten your legs or stretch your back. It's as if you were frozen in a mold, yet even during sleep people move frequently. The old Morris style chair with an ottoman the height of the seat is a good reclining chair that permits ample mobility and flexibility.

When you sit in something which is not right for you, your muscles are compelled to do the work the chair should do to keep your body in a correct position. Your muscles are like rubber bands. They like to be stretched to a certain tension to be comfortable. If there is nothing to pull them, to keep them stretched, then they shorten, and when the shortening is prolonged they cramp and become very painful. Likewise, if you overstretch them too vigorously, you may tear or rupture the fibres.

When you sit in a chair two things can give pain. First, if the natural body weight that keeps muscles stretched is modified by an unnatural position, as when the arm is pushed up by an armrest, then the muscles take up the slack and shorten. Second, if your muscles are overstretched from sitting improperly, they fail to keep the ligaments and joints in line, and the sagging of the body results not only in muscle injury but joint strain, too.

In selecting chairs, you're apt to keep an eye too much on what's novel and fashionable, not enough on what's suitable or, should I say, sittable. (Please turn to page 262)

A good chair should suit personal dimensions and allow freedom of motion



A model of good performance—that's what you could call this dining chair, shown in only a few of the many ways a sitter might sit in it—as, say when eating or in relaxed conversation after a meal. Unoccupied chair shows back pitch which gives firm support to a diner without pushing him forward. Openness between back rest and seat creates flexible space in which a sitter can change positions freely. Height of back invites casual, arm-over-back-rest position.

No ideal chair exists, but if it did, it would automatically adjust its seat depth and height, the slope of its back and its arm height to the dimensions of each user. This combination of porch rocker and 18th-century leg stool may lack esthetic appeal but when moved closer together or farther apart as needed, the sloped stool and the tilting rocker can create a variety of angles and pitches to satisfy many different sitters. Here they make a lounging chair for a 5′4″ woman and a 6′4″ man.

The ideal chair would adapt to every sitter

House Beautiful Reports on Prefab Houses—as of Fall 1955

- Are they cheaper than conventionally built houses?
- Can you build them on your own lot?
- Do they have a variety of appearances?
- How many models can one choose from?
- Are they well designed?
- Do they offer high-class living?

By ROBERT MOSHER
House Beautiful's Building Editor

This year, perhaps for the first time in history, you can buy a prefabricated house with good architectural design, logical placement on the site, and the most up-to-date mechanical equipment. Judged by the standards House Beautiful uses for all houses, you can buy a house, almost totally fabricated in a factory, that has nearly as many amenities as one you would build on a custom basis from your own architect's design. But as in all buying, you need to know how to shop, what to ask for, how to fill your own needs and, above all, how to get the house properly and beautifully placed on the land it is to occupy. If you are shopping in a lower price bracket, the chances are you can get a good prefab house cheaper than if you tried to build it on a custom basis.

Since the war, the lowest-cost new houses in any town have been the little prefabs, built on cheap, unattractive land down by the tracks, all looking alike and with the minimum of facilities. Today, prefabs may be among the nicest-looking houses in the best residential areas. And their looks can be so diverse that only a specialist in the prefabricating industry might be able to identify them. They now can have exteriors of stone, brick or wood. About two dozen firms make prefabs that sell for more than $20,000. (This last summer a prefab house in Cleveland, all dressed up with extras to serve as a demonstration, sold for $70,000.)

The house shown on these and the next eight pages is the best of the better type of prefab that is (Please turn the page) beginning to appear on the market. HOUSE BEAUTIFUL chose it to furnish and show to our readers in 19 cities as an example of the quality that is only now beginning to be obtainable in 1955. Its selling price varies considerably, depending on the cost of the land on which it is built and the amount of landscape development included with the lot. Its price ranges from $21,110 to $27,500 for the 19 cities—always exclusive of the cost of the land. Extras such as garage, carport, patio paving, and screening for the porch add to the local base price.

The 1955 trend to higher-priced, better-designed and better-equipped houses is very well symbolized by this de luxe "Ridgewood" model of the National Homes Corporation. It was designed by a competent architect with many "assists" from other types of experts. Wherever you see it being shown as a demonstration house, it will have been placed on the land it occupies by the original architect who designed it, instead of being dropped onto it, as is so often the case with most builder houses, without any regard to existing grades, trees, or surrounding conditions, such as streets, near-by houses, or orientation to winds and sun. If you order it from any of the National Homes dealers, you can require that the dealer use this siting service offered by the main office of National Homes.

Several of the better type of prefab-house producers are trying to deliver all the niceties that go with the highest standards we know about in this decade. For instance, the prefabricated house may have better lumber and more up-to-date quality equipment than the ordinary house. This is because the prefab manufacturer, making thousands of houses every year and selling through a dealer system, cannot take chances with inferior materials that slow down factory manufacture or site assembly. Nor do the dealers want to be bothered with complaints and servicing demands, since a big volume of satisfied customers is their goal. To put it in a nutshell, they can't afford complaints. (Text continues on page 252. More pictures on following pages.)

This seven-room house from the National Homes Corporation will be on view in 19 cities, starting September 20. It will be furnished exactly as you see it here, but its exterior site conditions and landscaping may vary considerably, since no two will be the same, and some dealers will have included a larger terrace than others. You can see here how agreeable a 1955 prefab home can be. The architect was Charles Goodman.

Here's a good example of how a prefabricated house can be located on a sloping site so it both enhances the site and is enhanced by it. The red brick of the fireplace was continued as a low retaining wall across the front of the property, helping to wed the house with the ground and eliminating a hard-to-mow bank. The brick reappears again in the wall of the garage, tying that unit visually to the main house, even though it is separated by the terrace. As a result, the paved terrace, thus enclosed by brick wall and garage, seems to be a garden room belonging more to the house than to the outdoors. A 13′ x 15′ porch roof extends beyond the house over this terrace, which could be screened if desired. Storage space for trash cans exists at the back of the garage. Garage, placed on the side line, helps screen living terrace.

The Living Room

Living room area is well designed for placement of furniture against walls. Living room proper is 13′2″ x 24′, but dining space adds another 9′8″ x 9′ space, which optically is part of living room, creating an over-all spacious feeling. (See plan on page 203). The high band of windows on fireplace wall leaves lower half of wall available for most types of furniture.

Usable wall space in living room totals 33′6″, a big asset in furniture arrangement and a rarity in small houses today. This seating group is backed by triple windows draped floor to ceiling in a print and casement mesh.

Seven 30″ sectional ottomans placed together to form sofas permit a flexible seating arrangement. We liked idea of two distinct groupings and could manage it on a budget, because we used foam-rubber-cushioned ottomans.

House Beautiful's Decorating Staff furnished this 7-room house on a total budget of $6,000 for everything except the outdoor terrace furniture. All draperies and bedspreads are ready-made. All merchandise can be bought in fall offerings of stores

The Kitchen

This is the best kitchen we have ever seen in a prefab house. It's a miracle of compactness, with counters making an uncompleted square around a 5′ by 7′ working floor space (kitchen's total size is 11′10″ by 11′5″). Its compactness is due to many built-ins: refrigerator and freezer, oven and cooking top, garbage disposal, dishwasher, ventilating fan with intake hood. In addition, there's a stainless-steel double bowl sink, a pass-through to dining room, plastic counters,

The Dining Room

The important factor in the floor plan of this house is the relation of kitchen to dining room and family room, because of the flexibility and variety it gives to these rooms. The dining room could be furnished as part of the living room, since it is really an L of that room. Then the family room could become a dining room. Or the family room could be used as a second, more informal living room, equipped to take the rough usage of youngsters. The family room could be a daytime nursery, because it is visually a part of the kitchen. Pass-through opens from dining room to kitchen. Shown closed above.

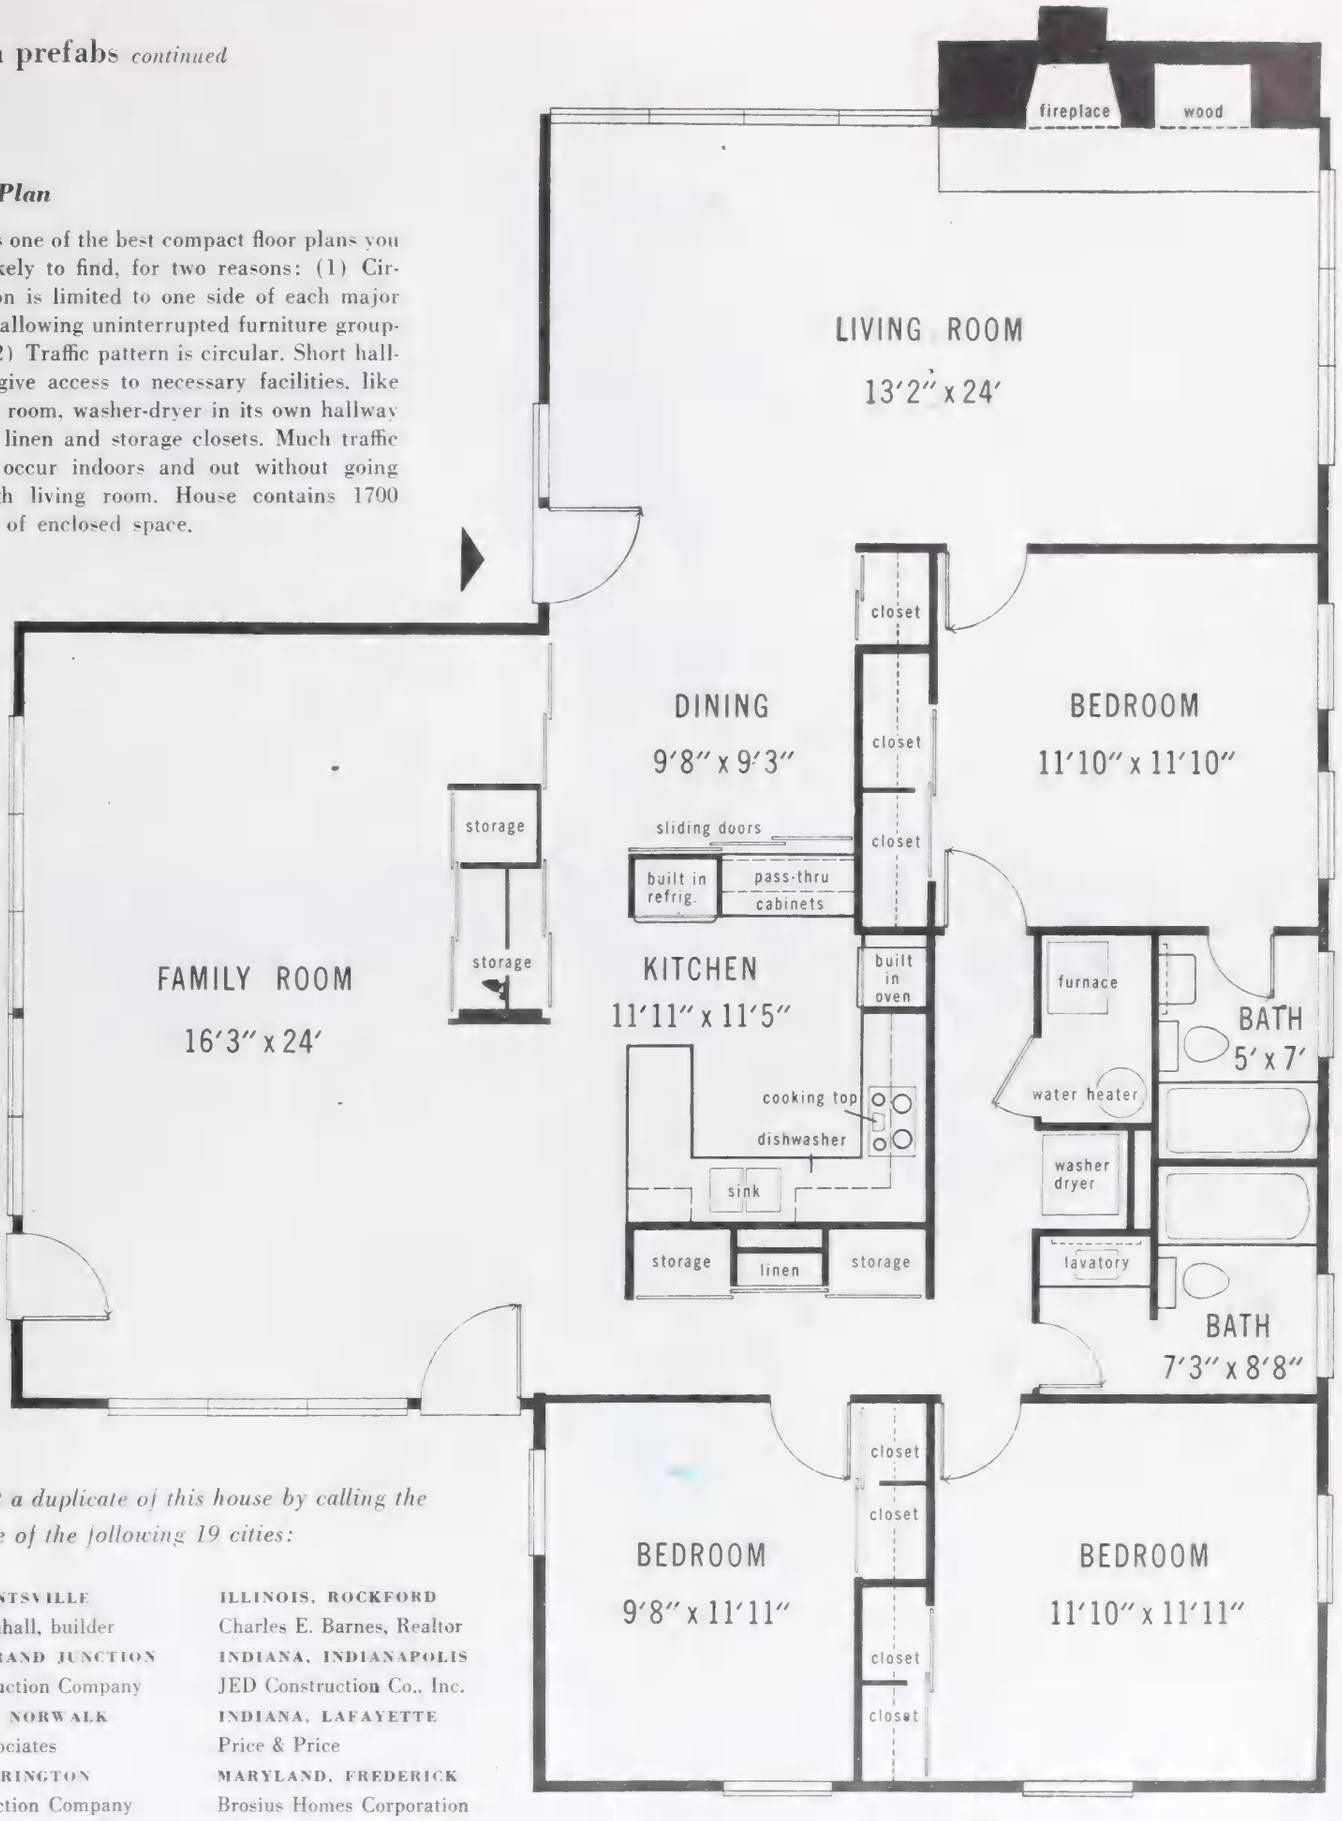
The Family Room

This all-purpose room has an ideal relation to the kitchen as well as to the living room and terrace. It can be cut off from the living room completely, so that formal and informal activities are separated, even though going on at the same time. Its position in the floor plan makes it possible for it to be anything from an ironing room, to a TV or rumpus room.

Engineered to fit this particular house and designed for sill height, is an assembly of walnut chests that exactly fits 11′10″ window wall of master bedroom. Despite minimum of floor space, it offers a room-length counter and a total of nine drawers with another three in chest next to bed. Bank of closets lines fourth wall. Mirror increases optical size of room.

The Bedrooms

Girl's study-bedroom has machine-embroidered appliqués on spreads, pillows and curtains. Fleur-de-lys motif is repeated in cast brass brackets that hold curtain rods. Hanging from same devices above beds are fat bolsters for reading comfort. Touches like these, calling more for ideas than for an outlay of money, turn a modest room into something special.



A third bedroom makes a study-hobby room when not needed for guests. Bedroom look is dispelled by use of commodious sofa that opens into a double bed. Furnished for reading, desk-work or rug-hooking, this little retreat has a cool color scheme of blue, white and beige that minimizes size of furniture. Two white-fronted chests line up along a wall not shown here.

The Plan

This is one of the best compact floor plans you are likely to find, for two reasons: (1) Circulation is limited to one side of each major room, allowing uninterrupted furniture grouping. (2) Traffic pattern is circular. Short hallways give access to necessary facilities, like heater room, washer-dryer in its own hallway niche, linen and storage closets. Much traffic could occur indoors and out without going through living room. House contains 1700 sq. ft. of enclosed space.

The Height of Individuality

Here are six original ideas from the homes of several of Hawaii's most distinguished decorators. They all show how much individuality can result when you look at things with a fresh eye. For you then discover new and useful applications—even for art objects. All six ideas demonstrate how to make architectural use of five antiques and fragments of art.

Fresh use of antique wardrobe

The doors of the linen closet in the home of Mrs. Alice Spalding Bowen originally belonged to a French Provincial armoire, a bulky type of furniture not too useful in our modern houses with their built-in storage. But Mrs. Bowen's fresh eye saw that the doors of an armoire are the best part of the piece. So she asked her architect to use them instead of the conventional doors usually used on a hall closet. Note the fine relationship between the carving on the doors and the S-curves in the iron balustrade. Albert Ely Ives, architect.

Window-darkening screen

Most people who own a beautiful four-panel Japanese screen treat it like a painting, mounting it over a sofa or letting it stand on the floor in an important corner. But decorator Marion Forbes of Honolulu found more useful work for hers. She wanted it to completely darken her air-conditioned bedroom, so she mounted the screen, in two equal sections, to slide from a curtain track. By solving a practical problem with something beautiful she achieved individuality. Her goal was to solve the problem; originality was the by-product. We are inclined to think that true individuality is more likely to be achieved as a by-product. If aimed at directly, it tends to become merely eccentricity.

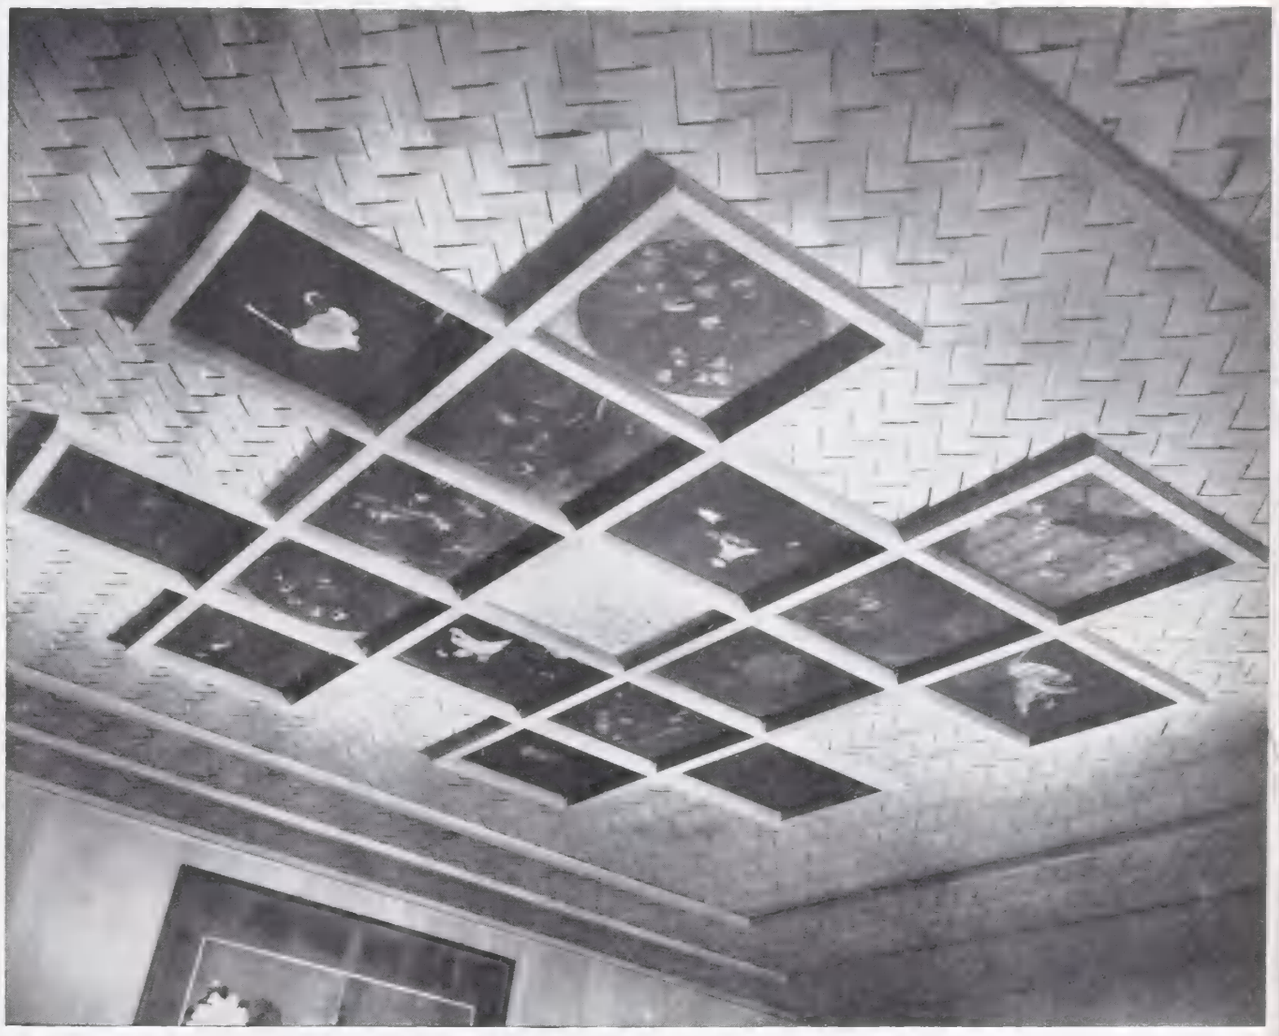
The Height of Individuality



Antique carving masks a motor court

These gates, now forming a breezy privacy screen between the garage and the entry court at the home of Mrs. Florence Hayward, were made of bits of old Chinese grillwork. Fragments like these are often to be found, but most people would pass them by, not seeing what pleasant uses might be made of them. HOUSE BEAUTIFUL calls this talent "creative purchasing."

Old teak doorway in a concrete wall

The modern concrete block wall here looks like an unexpected but predestined setting for this antique oriental gate. It is the entry to the home of Mrs. Marion Forbes, of the decorating firm of Robert Ansteth, Ltd., who has the imagination and appreciation of materials required to produce such individuality. Both these talents can be developed by trying to see more than the obvious uses possible in all the objects you look at.

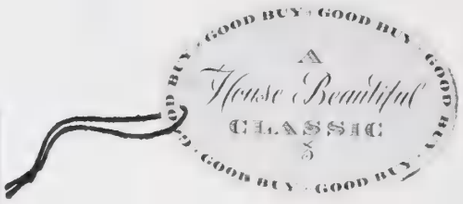
A series of 14 painted lacquer panels—a rather unusual collector's cache of chinoiserie—is framed in slim wood outlines and attached to the ceiling in an interesting geometric pattern. Ceiling itself is original in that it is covered with lauhala matting, a tropical leaf you've probably seen woven in place mats and porch rugs. This, like the picture below, is in the lanai, or porchlike living room, of Mrs. Alice Spalding Bowen's home.

High fidelity encased in antique panels



Built out from one wall of the lanai, a simple box-like cabinet surrounds Mrs. Bowen's radio and record player, also furnishes space for record albums. But its sliding doors, in keeping with the oriental elegance of the rest of the room, were contrived of two antique Chinese wood panels. These paintings on wood were shorter than wanted, so you note how they were filled in with another material at the bottom to fit the desired dimensions.

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL CLASSIC NO. 9

In a living room

As an important, living-room commode, this piece can store books, games, record player and the like. Wood is French wild cherry in either a "grayed fruitwood," brown or amber finish.

When we award this tag to furniture, it indicates that we think it will go anywhere—in any room of the house to enhance any type of décor. We think this commode will perform beautifully in any type of situation. We believe it is fairly priced at around $400 for the grade of cabinetwork used.

ACCESSORIES FROM ACCESSORIES & DESIGN

As a dining room buffet

Behind three paneled doors there is generous space for storing tableware. Tray drawer in center cabinet can hold flat silver, leaving ample room below for tall or bulky hollow ware. Side cabinets each have adjustable shelves. It is 58″ wide, 19½″ deep, 34½″ high. Chest by Baker Furniture Co. We show this piece again in dining-room use on page 212.

A dresser in a bedroom

Ancestry of this versatile sideboard can be traced to 18th-Century Italian Provincial, Regency and Biedermeier. But it is not so ornate that it would look out of place in a modern setting. It also comes with cane doors. You may order it with the elegance of marble on its broken-curve top, which naturally costs more.

A common-sense policy about tulip planting

By JEAN LAWSON

It's tulip-buying time again, which means it's time to analyze last year's mistakes in using tulips. There are four ways to buy them and four ways to use them. Use whichever applies to your needs and your garden.

If you were not 100 per cent satisfied at the end of last spring's tulip blooming season, maybe it was because you have not been buying and managing right. It is HOUSE BEAUTIFUL's observation that several misconceptions and misunderstandings stand in the way of the public's use of tulips.

What bulbs you buy and when you dig them up after bloom, if impressive display is your goal, is quite different from what you buy and when you dig, if tulips for indoor cut arrangements are your object. So read the catalogs with realism. Let these facts guide your choice:

1. Massed in big display beds. Like most other bulbs, tulips look messy once they have bloomed, but their foliage must not be cut off until it yellows and dies, which may not be until July. To the gardener who likes a well-groomed look this is exasperating. When he's ready to dig the bulbs, the identifying foliage has disappeared. If he had set other plants among them to cover the dying foliage and fill the summer gaps left by tulips, he risks damage to their roots in exploring the soil.

The easy, practical way out of this dilemma is to restrict tulips to certain tulip display beds. Then, when the first petal falls in a display area, dig all the bulbs in the group and replace them at once with annual plants. In this way there are no troublesome bare spots or areas of untidy foliage. The faded tulips can be heeled in a trench in an out-of-the-way place with just the tops showing and left until they have matured and died back. The flowers for next year's bloom form inside the bulb during this period. Then they are dug, dried and stored in mesh sacks or nylon stockings and hung in an airy location, from the garage rafters for example. In the fall they can be replanted in the cutting garden, where their smaller flower size and uncertainty of bloom will be less important and may even be desirable.

The important display beds are then replanted with new top-size bulbs to insure maximum flower size and uniformity of bloom the following spring, for you must accept a gradual weakening of the bulbs and an inevitable loss in flower quality. So, if fancy display is your goal, buy fresh bulbs each year for areas where you want to be sure of an impressive tulip show. For display purposes buy Darwins, single early types, Triumphs or Mendels, Breeders or Cottage types.

2. Small, informal drifts in natural settings. Among the tulips, as among the daffodils, are many small, relatively short-stemmed plants particularly well suited to informal groupings along steps, in rock and wild gardens, ground covers and even meadows. Well-drained soil is (Please turn to page 316)

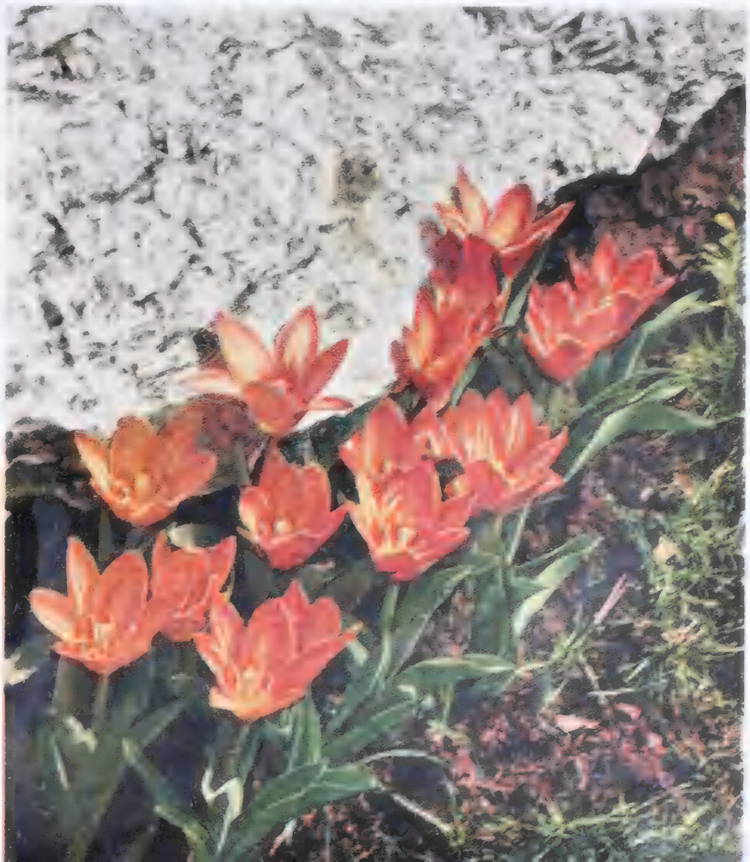
Tulips are most effective when used in these four ways:



1. For massed display in important spots, where vigorous stems and showy bloom matter above all other considerations.
2. For small drifts in natural locations, where their sad appearance as they die down is not crucial or even conspicuous.
3. For forcing in pots during the winter, when a few flowers keep our hope alive that spring is coming and with it many flowers.
4. In cutting gardens for indoor use.

Simple Meals – the dream of every gourmet

All it takes for the finest of dinners is an unaffected menu with a few well-chosen dishes

By HAROLD KNAPIK

The best meal I have ever eaten was served at the home of a friend of mine, an elderly Frenchman. To eat well was his habit and consequently he made no fuss about it. He knew what he wanted and, perhaps because he did, he usually got it. The meal he served was not complicated: it began with "Jambon de Bourgogne," (a ham that is made into a sort of paté by crushing it with a fork, mixing into it a good quantity of parsley and garlic, and binding it with a jelly made of the ham stock).

The main course was roast chicken; there were several salads, an assortment of cheeses and a variety of compotes of fruit. With the compotes were served almond cookies, but they were not ordinary almond cookies. They were as light as a feather and, although they were made of many ingredients including a liqueur, they tasted more like an almond than almonds.

For me, there were three things remarkable about this meal: the quality of the ingredients, their preparation in a manner that accentuated their freshness and quality, and the fact that, when served, they came out as a perfect projection of my host's taste and knowledge. It was haute cuisine, but not the haute cuisine of the restaurants. It was, in truth, a simple meal.

The idea of serving a simple meal to guests who really know food may seem strange to some people, but such a meal, if really interesting and well-balanced, is actually the dream of every gourmet. The truth is that an unrelieved diet of restaurant-style haute cuisine can only end in disaster. I have heard too many times the muttered "I have been eating too much" of the gourmet who sits down to Filet de Sole Marguery and Salami de Faisan. He will eat it because it is there and because he is a guest. He must postpone until (Please turn to page 238)

You are drinking stars

The monk Dom Perignon, it is said, stood in the cool, limestone caves of Epernay, France, tasted the living, sparkling, gold-pale champagne he had created, and ecstatically exclaimed, "It is like drinking stars!"

By POPPY CANNON

Some insist that this story about Dom Perignon is, to put it mildly, apocryphal. But he must have said it, for, to paraphrase Voltaire, if there had been no such phrase, we should have had to invent a Frenchman to say it.

There are many legends and a web of myth surrounding champagne, but there are no doubts about the reality of the doughty monk who has become a kind of patron saint. He was cellarmaster of the Benedictine Abbey of Hautevilliers in 1668. Already there were great wines in that district, but until the beginning of the 17th Century they were, generally, still wines—no sparkle!

Only occasionally did a miracle happen, when a wine, already considered perfect, developed a strange exuberance, a bright-dancing activity, a white crown of mousse. Much desired and treasured, but elusive, this miracle was considered a divine gift that God bestowed on his favorite wine and his most devoted vintners. The less believing tried to explain away the miracle, as is their wont, by ascribing it to "natural forces," like the influence of the moon—as if such an explanation were any less miraculous.

What Dom Perignon believed, nobody knows. He seems to have been a practical mystic with an inquiring, empirical turn of mind. It was he who observed that the wines of this small region on the banks of the Marne often ferment twice; first, after the harvest in the fall, (Continued on page 231)

Cooking with Champagne

By ALICE B. TOKLAS

"Why not cook with champagne," said a friend, "since in California you drank it in the morning and the maids picked up diamonds when cleaning after parties?"

"Yes," I answered feebly, for we did drink champagne in the morning, at least a generation before the champagne cocktail had been created, and once a diamond had been found on the floor after a party.

When I came to Paris, the first dish I learned to cook with champagne was:

Braised Capon

Rub a capon (if you can find one and can afford it; if not, a fine big chicken) on all sides with half a lemon. This will keep the flesh white. Then rub in ½ teaspoon salt. Melt ¼ cup butter in a casserole with a tight-fitting cover. When the butter is melted, place the capon in the casserole and heat it on all sides, but without browning. Reduce heat, cover. After 15 minutes, raise heat and add 1½ cups dry champagne. Cover, lower heat and cook gently for 45 minutes. During this time, boil 4 large artichokes for about 30 minutes, depending upon their size. When a leaf can be removed easily, take from heat, drain and remove leaves, leaving the hearts. (The leaves can be scraped later and used in an omelette.) Also, boil in salted water, ¾ pound green asparagus tips. Do not overboil, but when sufficiently tender, drain. Boil 1 pound very small new potatoes, add to the casserole. After the juice boils up again, place the fowl in a (Please turn to page 269)

You can play the organ

It is easy to play and to have fun with the electric organ. So writes author Arthur Wildman, who ought to know, because he teaches at Sherwood Music School, Chicago

No longer is organ playing reserved for the specially gifted and the highly trained. It's for everyone who can muster a little patience, a little time. The electronic organ has become a part of our present-day equipment for the enjoyment of living.

Time was when the king of instruments came only in the king size. It filled a huge space with its windchests and pipes, and it cost a small fortune. The organist was a professional musician who acquired competence through no fewer than six or eight years of preparatory and advanced study, beginning with piano keyboard training.

Now we set up in our living room an attractive console which takes little more room than a card table, and through the science of electronics it yields to our touch the tone colors of the organ and the orchestra. Here are drums, bells, banjo, harp, guitar; flutes, strings, reeds, brasses, diapasons, and other ensembles for our unending musical enjoyment. The cost lies within a reasonable budget.

This development in the field of invention has been matched by progress in methods of music teaching. With every prospect of making good on their promise, teachers can now say: "Whether you have studied music before or not, we will have you playing a piece on the organ by the end of your first lesson."

In recent years, efforts of music educators have been directed toward a wider spreading of music-making skills. When the electronic organ first came onto the scene, its possibilities as a home instrument were not immediately recognized. The organ continued for a while to be thought of as an instrument only for the professional musician. The idea persisted that organ study must be preceded by piano training.

Later it was realized that to bring the enjoyment of organ playing directly within reach of the home amateur musician (very amateur), there were needed some (Please turn to page 258)

Now it has become as easy to install an electric organ as it is to play one. This trim Wurlitzer "Spinette" takes up less than four feet of wall space and is only $25\frac{3}{4}$" deep. It blends beautifully with the décor of a period or contemporary room.

What one landscape architect learned from 1500 clients

Over the last 20 years Thomas Church and his associates have designed and installed at least a garden a week for clients all over the United States, Central America and Europe. Though readers of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL have seen many of Church's gardens, they may not have been aware of the philosophy underlying all his designing. This point of view, which is part of the reason for his being the leading landscape architect in the world today, is stated in a new book to be published by Reinhold late in October. Excerpts of some of the main points are presented on the next eight pages.

Gardens are for people

People affect design

We're all individuals, so our gardens and what we expect our land to do for us should vary as much as our demands and our personalities. No one can design intelligently for you unless he knows what you need, what you want and what you are like. Be sure to tell him.

One client may be mainly interested in a garden in which to sit, eat, sleep and to contemplate nature in carefree surroundings, as above. Another may begrudge every square foot not used for intensive gardening (left).

Indoor-outdoor isn't new

Indoor-outdoor living isn't a new idea. The Egyptians planned their houses and gardens together. The Romans knew all about it. The Greeks had a word for it. The Renaissance Italians developed it to a fine art. But living and entertaining outdoors are new and put new demands on the garden. The average homeowner today wants to use his garden to work in, to play in and relax in. And he wants it designed that way.

We are all different. So our gardens should be different, if they are to do for us what we want from our own plot of ground

Problems of upkeep should influence design and materials

Most people want easily maintained lawns, ground-covers or paving. They like plantings to be in permanent and slow-growing varieties. Frayed edges and unmanageable corners should be eliminated. Only a dyed-in-the-wool gardener wants his garden to be more work than contemplative pleasure.

There is, of course, no such thing as a hundred per cent work-free garden, and if there were, you'd soon tire of it, because it would cease to be a garden. Most people really want the space so organized that they can know the delights of gardening without becoming slaves to a scheme that never looks its best no matter how much time they spend on it.

Think twice, however, before you substitute for lawn. Once you are behind the mower you might as well cut a little more, and for year-round care few materials give you so much for so little. There's no doubt, though, that a large percentage of a garden can be paved and the result be both esthetic and practical.

Don't hide the front door

Arrival should be effortless. If it's not obvious where to park, if there is no room to park when you get there, if you stumble into the back door looking for the front door, or if the entrance is badly lighted, you have subjected your guests to a series of annoyances. No matter how warm your hearth or how beautiful your view, the over-all effect will be dimmed by these irritations.

Too often, also, the drive, the walk and the raised entry are of three materials. Simplify them: Try using only one material, as was done above.

Plants are the landscape

Plants offer us shade and shadow-play, shelter and sustenance, and are a link with our primeval past. They provide color, texture, form and mass to work with in man-made compositions. They burst into flower, drop their leaves, change their color and bear fruit. They are a friend to man. Knowing how to use them is what distinguishes a good landscape architect—and a good gardener.

Site conditions influence the design of a garden

TWO PHOTOS BY RONDAL PARTRIDGE

Take advantage of trees

When you first think of a garden, you think of a tree. It is the greatest single element linking us visually and emotionally with our surroundings. Other manifestations of nature—great rocks, deserts, moors, torrents, hurricanes—stir us, fill us with awe, make us afraid or humble, but we understand a tree, for it is part of our daily life.

"Possess" land you don't own

You can own as far as you can see. Skip that first impulse to enclose your garden with screen plantings and high walls. Instead, look out at the neighboring property.

Put as few obstacles and diverting lines as possible between you and your view, if it is a fine one and doesn't encroach on your privacy too much. The house at right, for example, looks over a golf course.

When you remodel an old garden

Look carefully at all existing features before the bulldozer moves in. Outmoded buildings (this lath house was such until its sides were removed to make it light and airy) may have a definite use, if you plan well.

When land is scarce

Use plants on the vertical surfaces if a garden is too small. Such plants will reduce glare, cast shadows, absorb noise, raise fruit, grow flowers—and also enrich the design. Above, they are the design.

FIVE PHOTOS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Site and house may determine terrace design

The terrace must have good relationship with the house and the rest of the garden in its location, size and form. It may be straight, angled or curved (right) as long as there is a valid reason. If a rectangle seems easiest, use it (left). In contrast, unrelated shapes may create a feeling of unrest in the garden.

Today's terrace is a roofless outdoor room

Terraces are for entertaining

The terrace has always been the man-made part of the garden. Today our terraces are for entertaining, and they must be big enough to do graciously all that we expect of them.

The garden of today, with its avowed purpose of providing convenient pleasures and pleasant conveniences outdoors, usually needs some or all of the following:

Retaining walls, if the bulldozer has left your property with an erosion problem.

Steps for lots too steep for ramps, or for flat lots where differences in elevation have been created.

Fences and walls for protection and privacy.

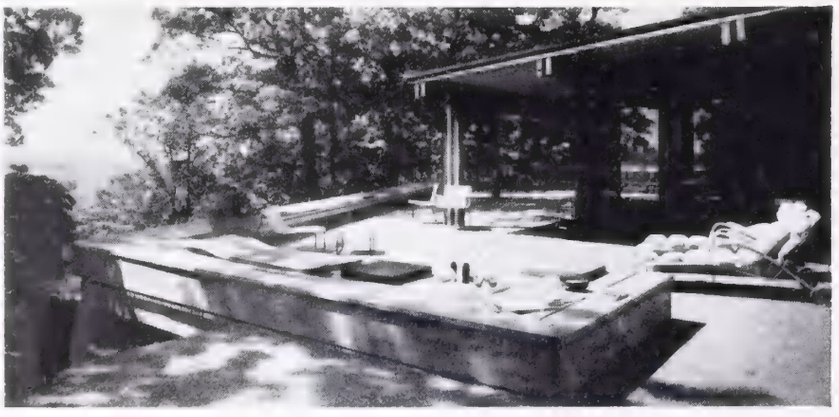
Paving for terraces, walks and service areas; to avoid mud and reduce upkeep.

Play space for children where they will be safe, contented and easily watched.

Built-in seating to reduce moving and storing of outdoor furniture.

Storage walls for quick access to equipment.

Raised flower and vegetable beds for neatness and for convenience to the gardener.



Mowing strips to define lawn and planting areas and to simplify grass cutting.

Service yards for laundry, firewood and the like.

Garden work areas for tools, incinerator, potting bench, mulch bin, etc.

Pools for swimming, dipping, wading, fish, water lilies.

A terrace can be a deck, too

Consider building a deck if the site offers too many difficulties for a paved terrace.

A successful terrace depends upon these components:

- intelligent placing, spacing, and interrelation of its parts.
- understanding possibilities, limitations of structural and plant materials.
- good evaluation of the weakness and strength of various colors and textures.
- choice of materials sympathetic with the site, with each other, and with the people who are to use them.

Put a small terrace where you need it

A small, quiet place to read the morning paper, to eat, knit, sun-bathe, or shell peas may be outside any door or deep in the garden. The location is a matter of convenience. If the terrace is for:
Eating—it should be easily reached from the kitchen, unless designed for picnics;
Sleeping—it belongs in a quiet spot where trees can be used for swinging a hammock;
Sun-bathing—it needs privacy and wind-shelter.

Look for a place that suits the special purpose of each terrace. Maybe it's a point from which you have a view that you can't obtain from the house: an area which the sun warms at certain hours; a spot with an afternoon breeze in the summer, or protected from the wind in the fall, or one that is a winter sun-pocket.

Terrace design must be regional

The problems of design, orientation and materials for terrace building vary enormously in different parts of the country. The problem may be protection from wind, as in the West Texas terrace to the left, or reaching out for a breeze, as in St. Louis. It may be designed largely for use at night (Arizona), or require screening (in the mosquito belt). It may need sun most of the time—or shade most of the time. A terrace large enough for both is ideal.

The world is our garden

Our landscape architect's resources are more varied and provocative than they have ever been. He has the benefit of the best of man's efforts in architecture, horticulture and the fine arts. He has the materials and resources of civilization and the natural world at his disposal.

We borrow from the past, but we make changes to suit our needs. Our gardens are the better for it

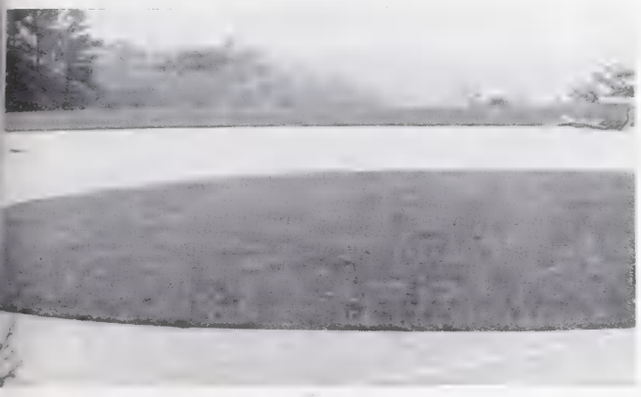
No right or wrong side to fences

The post and frame we used to hide has become a design feature of our fences. It is used to create pattern and strong shadows. Now a fence is kept plain or made exciting, depending upon the desired mood of the garden.

Steps are also design features

Steps can be much more than a connection between two levels. They can add strength and crispness of line. They can steady a composition, direct the eye, ornament the scene. They can be used to express the mood and tempo of the garden. Caution: They can be too dominant also.

Trees can be living sculpture



Look carefully at your trees to be sure that you have exploited all their possible beauty. Their beauty is not in foliage alone, but in their shape and branching, and in the relation of structure to foliage. It's pleasant and exciting to look up into a tree, through a tree, as well as at it.

Since the volume of air space in a garden is just as important as the volume of foliage, you may gain more than you expect in the feeling of spaciousness by removing lower limbs, clearing out the center, and even reshaping the tree.

Foundation planting is out

The "gardener's garden," with its massive foundation planting, has virtually disappeared. The paving and grass can now approach the house directly. A tree, placed to frame the house or to cast its shadow on it, does more "softening" than a forest of shrubs. Kept paved and clean at the foundation, the house better preserves its dignity. It's more convenient for walking and far easier for washing windows.

We now pave for pattern

Paving is a major design element in the garden. It is not necessarily just a terrace, plus a network of paths leading to various parts of the garden. It may also cover large areas and contain grass, flowers, trees, rocks and pools.

Paving cannot substitute for open lawn on a large property, but the proportion of paving to grass can be greatly increased without sacrificing you of the fundamental pleasures of a garden.

Our new garden work centers

Every garden should have a handy place to pot a plant, store plant food, hang up the tools, build a compost pile. It may vary in size from a small bench against a fence to a large, efficient work center.

We no longer fear an axis

Today's garden always has one axis, and sometimes has two or three. All compositions, however free, are built around them. The great designers of natural gardens may seem to have thrown away their T-squares, but the axis is just as strong as in the mirror pool of the Taj Mahal: it's just less obvious. The garden above is a good example of an axis which is visual rather than mechanical. The eye is tolerant. It likes to be influenced by a view, nudged by a tree, seduced by a brook.

Curbs keep our garden neat

Plant beds control a design that might otherwise become obliterated by time and planting. Pattern remains even when the beds are unplanted.

How to see

10 Centuries in 10 Days

The whole sweep of history—from Medieval to all-out Twentieth Century—can be easily seen and assimilated in tiny, compact Belgium

By HENRY PIEPER

The miracle of foreign travel is that it takes you out of yourself so completely. And a trip to a country with an ancient civilization lets you make a trip backward in time as you go forward in space.

Belgium is a country where the titillation of the time-space experience is unusually acute. For, all in one day, you can fly by regular, scheduled helicopter after seeing the Musée des Beaux Arts in Liege to the 16th-century home of Peter Paul Rubens in Antwerp, and still have time to get to Brussels to have dinner in the fantastically gilded 17th-century Grande Place.

Not that you would do it this way! There is too much to see in Liege and Antwerp to permit such a short stay. But it dramatizes how Belgium is one of the most modern countries in Europe, while, at the same time, it has at least ten centuries of history visibly present in the contemporary scene.

For people with an interest in the good life, Belgium is a country that offers a lot. Here is an example: You can learn more about French culinary terms and foodstuffs by wandering around in the grocery department of the big Brussels department store Au Bon Marché than by trying to translate menus and cookbooks with a dictionary. It's as big, fancy and de luxe as the grocery department at Macy's or Marshall Field's. And since Belgian food is as French as the French (perhaps even more so) you can straighten out a lot of nouns that you have been confused about. It's a better visual dictionary than any you can find in the food marts around the Place de la Madeleine in Paris.

Less than 24 hours from New York in a modern flying carpet, little Belgium lies like a huge supermarket at the center of an enormous international turntable. All the temptations you might find in other parts of Europe are spread out here in miniature before your hungry eyes. With the least possible effort you can make Brussels your headquarters and visit five other countries in as many days.

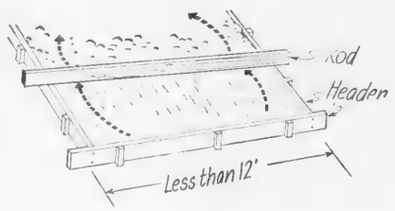
How to finish and cure concrete

By LEAVITT DUDLEY

Part 3 on working with concrete. Part 1, "How to Mix Concrete" appeared in March, page 138. Part 2, "Mix Concrete with Imagination"—in July, 1955, page 71.

So as to achieve the very best results from the effort of installing your own concrete work, you must have a clear understanding of the finishing technique. At this stage of the work your efforts will either pay off handsomely or result in a disappointing failure. Concrete must receive loving care at all stages of its placement, but it is in the finishing that the real beauty and utility of this good material is achieved.

Overworking the wet concrete is the major cause of trouble in home installation and the easiest to avoid. You want just enough of the finer particles brought to the surface to promote a long wearing finish. Overworking brings too much water and concrete paste (laitance) to the surface, resulting in "soft" concrete with a network of fine cracks (crazing), scaling and dusting.

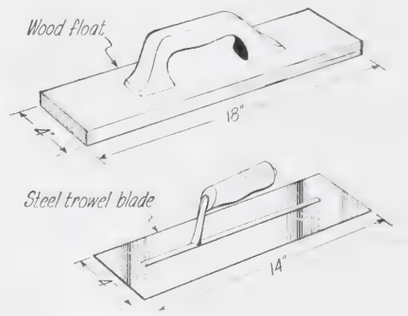


Concrete before finishing ... and after finishing

Finishing is better and more easily done during moderate weather conditions. Freezing temperatures cause powdering; heat, dryness and windiness bring about premature set. Experts work only during the cool of the morning or evening on hot summer days.

Three hundred square feet per day is about the maximum the average home craftsman should attempt to finish. Amateurs who try larger sections may get into trouble with premature setting.

Finishing occurs in two stages, the first as soon as the wet concrete is dumped into the forms; the second thirty minutes to four hours later (depending upon the weather) when the concrete has set enough to be firm to the touch.



Step 1: "Rodding" strikes off the excess concrete and provides the first rough leveling. The rod, a long 2 x 4, is drawn across the surface with a see-sawing motion while supported by the header boards of the form. Motion of the see-sawing rod forces the concrete from high spots into the low areas.

Step 2: "Tamping" is highly important: It insures that the forms are completely filled, eliminating all voids and air pockets. Professionals find the easiest way to tamp small areas is to walk around in it with boots on.

If building a wall, tamp concrete with a heavy stick or shovel handle. Avoid over-tamping because it will force big aggregate to the bottom of the form, weakening the concrete.

Step 3: "Floating" begins to provide a finished look. It is done with a wooden tool called a float. Floating pushes the coarse aggregate just below the surface and brings the fine aggregate up, producing an even, rough finish. A 4" x 13" straight-grain hardwood float is best, but one made of pine is durable enough for occasional use. Incidentally, floats and trowels work better when their edges are worn and "broken in" from previous use. Avoid overdoing floating process.

Step 4: Check the plasticity of the concrete after the initial set by pressing it with your fingers. If the concrete has a putty-like consistency, definitely retaining the imprint after you have removed your fingers, it is ready to work. If the depression fills with moisture, it is still too wet to work. Caution: Concrete can set very quickly, especially if there is any wind. Test continuously.

Step 5: Level and smooth the surface with the float. Many experts ike other wines; but unlike other vines, they wake a second time. At the very moment when sap begins to rise in the roots in the fields, those wines, though far away in deep, cool caves, feel some mysterious urgency and rise again like a hibernating, fragile thing.

Dom Perignon not only noted the phenomenon, but discovered ways to encourage, enhance and control it. He found that it was sometimes necessary to stimulate the "second living." He learned how to thicken the glass bottles to control the breakage, which in those early days was often extremely high. From wandering monks he found out about the use of corks made from the bark of a certain oak tree grown only in Spain and Portugal. He discovered how to assist nature by adding sweetness through a "dosage" of liqueur. He devised an ingenious way to wire the bottle tops, so as to hold the delightful effervescence in the wine.

MOST important of all he translated into wine making the principle of all for one and one for all. For he learned how to blend the vines of many vineyards and often of many seasons, choosing one vine for its body, another for freshness, another for clarity, bouquet and fragrance. His was the first of all the famed cuvées.

Finally, it was Dom Perignon who realized the great natural advantages the region possessed in its remarkable caves where the wine could be properly stored. Very little about champagne has been learned since his day.

He was blind toward the end of his life, but the great monk's palate must have had a hundred eyes. He could sniff a wine, swish it around in his mouth and tell you the hillslope from which it had come, the name of the property where it had grown. He could practically reconstruct a weather chart of rainfall and sun during the months when the grapes had ripened.

Even in Dom Perignon's day the wines made from the grapes of Pierzenay were known to give a light freshness to the cuvée; for delicate fragrance, those of Avonnay are noted. From the vineyards of Cramant come a particular finesse. Bouzy has softness and bouquet.

There are cellarmasters, champagne growers and even a few amateurs who attempt today to match the exploits of the good Dom. Many of them are remarkably talented. It seems that it is not true that you must be a man born of the soil of France in order to have this facility, for one of the more celebrated tasters and blenders is a woman from Scotland, the dynamic Madame Bollinger who ever since the death of her husband in World War II has guided the fortunes, as well as the cuvées, of the Bollinger firm.

Champagnes from Champagne

According to French law, custom and tradition, champagne is not a generic name for any fine sparkling white wine. Literally it refers only to wines grown in a certain small district in the northeastern part of France, a section which consists of about 22,000 acres, roughly one per cent of the wine-growing area—the smallest wine-producing region in France. Furthermore—and this is a fact less widely known—the pressed juices of only four strains of grapes are permitted. Three are black varieties—Pinot, Petit Meslier and Arbaine. As for white grapes, there is only one—Chardonnay.

The "secret" of champagne is not mere locale or type of grape. Part of it is inherited knowledge. From father to son, from uncles and aunts to nieces and nephews, through many generations and over hundreds of years, certain lessons have been handed down.

The great champagne families know that some vines do better on hills with southern exposure, as in the Marne Valley. Others should face north, as in the Rheims mountain area, or east, as on the White Slopes, so called because only the white Chardonnay grapes are grown there. We heard it said many times in the Champagne country that "some vines even require, in addition to sunlight and warm winds from certain directions, a special light reflected from the chalky soil."

Another hereditary vineyardist said, "You can export cuttings of the grape strains, but you can't send the chalky soil anywhere. You can't duplicate the sunshine, the wind or the way the rains run down our hillsides. That's why true champagne can come only from Champagne."

This does not mean that excellent sparkling wines with many champagne characteristics are not available in other parts of the world. Even the official committee of champagne wines takes a benign attitude toward some of their foreign relatives, particularly those from the United States: As one man expressed it, "The more people get acquainted with our kind of wine, the better for all of us. The only ones who hurt the champagne industry are the makers of inferior wines. That goes for France as well as America."

All Those Yesterdays

Champagne has an enchanting history. It was a part of the miracles of the early Saints. St. Remy caused the wine to spring from an empty barrel, and the story is sculptured into the stones of Rheims Cathedral and woven into its tapestries. So, also, is the second miracle, when St. Remy gave to Clovis a blessed cup and told him he could fight as long as the cup held wine.

Champagne is the traditional coronation wine of the kings of France. Louis XIV made it a rule to drink it every day of his life and Madame de Pompadour advised a friend, "It is the only wine a woman can drink who is careful of her beauty. It does not turn your face scarlet. It makes you glow without an ugly blush. You can drink it and still be beautiful."

Yet, for all its glamour and glory, champagne is practical. It is the one wine which even the French admit can be used from one end of the meal to the other. It is an ideal aperitif. It consorts happily with fish or poultry, red or white meat, cheese and fruit. After the meal it is perfect, too; and between meals, ideal.

This is not to say that any single champagne can be all things to all courses at all times. A sweet champagne, or even a semi-dry, would be cloying as a cocktail. A frail and delicate champagne would be lost if served with roast beef. A full-bodied, hearty-flavored champagne could overpower a delicate sole, but would achieve, on the other hand, a perfect union with a piece of brie cheese. And a sweet dessert can make even the finest of dry champagnes taste acid by contrast.

Champagne Appreciation

One knowledgeable American, an engineer with international affiliations, insists that he owes a liberal education in champagne to a dozen trips via Air France on the Golden Parisian (between New York and Paris) and on the Epicurean luncheon flight across the Channel from Paris to London.

On both of these flights nothing but champagne is served with the meals. So, in the course of his wanderings, our engineer friend has, according to his own confession, become really well acquainted with the eight champagnes served by Air France (for a fuller list of great champagnes, see page 233)—Heidsieck Monopole, Charles Heidsieck, Mumm, Veuve Clicquot, Perrier Jouet, Cordon Rouge, George Goulet and Taittinger.

He went on to say, "Air France provides a perfect atmosphere for a course in champagne appreciation—fine wines chosen by experts, handled by experts, always the right champagne for the right menu. The right temperature, too! And here I have the leisure to enjoy them. No telephones and plenty of that peace of mind that comes from having a real respect for the engineering, the maintenance, the super-caution, as well as the gastronomic know-how of the French."

Signs of Distinction

How does the connoisseur arrive at a decision? How does any one?

When you are face to face with a wine list, a dealer's catalog or a bewildering display on the shelves of a shop, how can you know which champagne is for you?

Price is not much of a guide, for all the good ones are likely to be expensive. The cost of producing the champagne grape is probably the highest in the world. In contrast to other labors on the land and even other vineyards, where there are periods of rest and relaxation, the tasks of the champagne makers are like the proverbial tasks of women—never done. Not a month, or a week, hardly a day goes by when there is not some important occupation for those who maintain the wines, as well as those who press and bottle, turn and cork.

As Monsieur Lalou, head of the famous house of Mumm says, "There is one way to be sure of getting your money's worth. Select a great name." This is not snobbishness. The great names have the fine vineyards, use only the first gentle pressing from the grapes. They have the best blenders. Behind them are generations of tradition, education and connoisseurship. Their cellars are maintained at just the right temperature and humidity. They are practitioners of what seems like ancient rites. They know exactly how the bottles should be tilted in their wooden racks to take care of the sediment and just how much they should be turned each day; how long they should remain in each position. This remuage is accomplished with stylized movements as classic as the ballets or the Japanese No dance.

Don't believe that being abroad even in France, and especially in Paris, makes it unnecessary to know your brand, for some Paris restaurants and many night clubs are notorious for palming off not only second- or third-, but fourth-, fifth- and even sixth-grade wines.

Said one expert, "Offhand, I would judge that there are several dozen excellent champagnes." The wine card at the Lion d'Or Hotel in Rheims, last May, listed 75 different champagnes, but not all are available in the United States. However, just as a slight guide, here are 22 greats listed alphabetically. Please note:

Ayala, Besserat, Bollinger, Clicquot, Charles Heidsieck, Delbeck, George Goulet, Heidsieck Monopole, Irroy, Krug, Lanson, Laurent Perrier, Moët et Chandon, Mercier, Mumm, Perrier Jouet, Piper Heidsieck, Pommery, Pol Roger, Louis Roederer, St. Marceaux, Taittinger.

The Best of Years

Since all champagnes, as we know and revere them, are cuvées or blends of various wines, and since each great house has its coterie of blenders dedicated to the task of evolving each year a wine in keeping with its own standards, it is quite logical that vintages are far less important for champagnes than, for instance, for Bordeaux and Burgundies. Champagne depends as much on the art of its maker as upon the vagaries of nature.

It is quite fashionable now to insist that you actually prefer non-vintage champagnes. Faced with a choice of a non-vintage champagne with a well-known label and a vintage champagne made by an unknown, the knowledgeable will without hesitation take the name and let the vintage go.

Nevertheless, there is no gainsaying the fact, obvious to any sensitive palate and nose, that certain years have produced superior champagnes. For guidance we quote from Frank Schoonmaker's "New Kind of Vintage Chart," issued by Sherry Wine and Spirits, 679 Madison Avenue, New York, in which he has "tried to crowd as much relevant information as possible. Where numbers have been used, 20/20, as in the language of French school teachers and American opticians, means perfection, and 10/20 is barely passing."

1945—Very full-bodied wines, not too well balanced, and high in alcohol. With a few notable exceptions they have proved short-lived. Again with a few exceptions, the vintage now rates only about 12/20.

1946—Rather mediocre and acid as a whole. A few fairly good cuvées. 11/20.

1947—A great year. Rather soft wines, full-bodied, maturing early. Now at their peak. 17/20.

1948—Mostly used in non-vintage blends. Fair. 11/20.

1949—Great. Well-balanced wines, sturdy, but less heavy than the '45's and the '47's and will probably last longer. 17/20.

1950—Another great year, but of entirely different character. Wines remarkable for their finesse and breeding, now fresh and charming but should improve. 16/20.

1951—We shall never see it except under a non-vintage label. 8/20.

1952—Very great. Probably the best since the war, although, of course, it will not come on the market before 1956 at the earliest. On the basis of present evidence, at least 18/20, possibly 19/20.

1953—One of the most extraordinary vintages of the past three decades. Old vignerons in the champagne country shake their heads and say they have not seen such wines since 1928. Time alone will tell, but it promises to be at least 19/20, and possibly one of those 20/20 years which come along only about four or five times in a century.

1954—Certainly poor. Will never be shipped as a vintage.

1955—Although it is too early to be sure, most of the experts agree that the wine of this season will be well above the average. According to Joseph Dargent, international delegate of the Champagne Producers of France, we may even have a wine similar to a fine '43 or even '49. Perhaps 17/20.

We should point out that this appraisal of champagne vintages by Frank Schoonmaker does not agree entirely with the official opinion of the Champagne Commission. Schoonmaker is considerably more enthusiastic about the 1950's and also the '53's.

Still another judgment of the worth of various years is that of Count Robert L. de Vogué, head of Moët at Chandon, who selects the vintages worthy to be presented in Dom Perignon bottles.

The house of Moët et Chandon is closely linked to the fame of Dom Perignon, whose statue stands in their courtyard, for in 1794 the Moët family bought the vineyards and buildings of the Benedictine Monastery at Hautvilliers where the great Dom had been cellarmaster.

As a kind of memorial to Dom Perignon a special cuvée is bottled only in the best of the years, to bear his name and ancient label. Those years have been 1921, '28, '29, '34, '43 and '47. Opportunities for making one's own decision about these Dom Perignon vintages are, however, very limited. There are few to be had, anywhere, except for '43 and '47 which are in about these Dom Perignon vintages The early vintages are practically impossible to obtain.

Age Has Its Flavor

The story is told of a certain poseur who attempted to regale a dinner party with tales of a vintage champagne "100 years old." How did they know he was a poseur? Because the dating of champagne bottles did not start until 1880.

Since that time, however, there have been approximately 20 vintage years. Among the most celebrated are the champagnes of '93, '04, '06, '11, '21 and '28.

In the year when the elegant Eighties came to a close, there was a wine which inspired literally reams of fervid prose and conversation. This was the merry aristocrat of '89 whose green-gold cast was often compared to the eyes of certain damosels! There are a few present-day connoisseurs like André Simon and Alice Toklas who may have tasted this strangely exciting wine in all its glory around about the turn of the century, when it was ten or twelve years old. (We must ask them!)

Generally, it is agreed that champagne "is not fit to drink until it is five years old." At ten years or twelve, depending on the wine and the taste of the judge, it is at its best. At 20 years, "it begins to die." But here again wines vary. So do palates. The English, particularly, have a sentimental affection for old wines of all kinds, even champagne. They often enjoy that "taste of age" to which the French refer rather disparagingly as maderaisation. At the romantic cellars of Pommery we were served a champagne of 1904 and, to use the words of the French lady-poet, the Countess Louise de Vilmorin, "It is an awesome and inspiring thing to sniff from the cork and to feel on your tongue the taste of the world that existed before you were born."

For me it is impossible to say how I would have judged that bottle of Pommery 1904, if I had come upon it unknowingly. Emotion and sentiment (call it sentimentality) cannot be isolated from such an experience. Why should we try? The wine was old, but it was still lively and light. So was a 1911 Moët et Chandon. Certainly the excellence of both of these aged wines can be ascribed in part to the fact that they have been so carefully nurtured through the years, never moved from their own cellars, always held at exactly the same temperature under ideal conditions. One of our editors carried a thermometer and recorded the temperatures of various caves. They ranged from 50° F. to 52° F.

The most spectacular caves into which we carried the trusty thermometer were those of the house of Pommery, dug into the hillside near Rheims. Geologists say the chalk here is a thousand feet deep, and many of the cellars are believed to have been constructed in Roman times. Down, down you go, down 116 steps. We counted them.

You could, if you wished, wander through eleven miles of underground corridors marked with enamel plaques, named after all the capitals of the world, where champagne is served—all the capitals of the world! You look up hundreds of feet and see the light of day like a small pallid picture framed in the top of a stone pyramid. Many of the walls are covered with sculpture elaborately cut into the chalk and depicting, so we were told, "Bacchic scenes." Everywhere there are endless chains of the sectioned baskets, called "mannequins," carrying bottles overhead. And for background music, the light, resonant clinking of bottles, like silver bells in the mysterious semi-darkness. A perfect setting for a Hitchcock movie!

To Sip in Judgment

The experts go on and on about "limpidity," "body," "freshness," "fruitiness," "smoothness" and "bouquet." But how to translate these words? How to decide: "Is this a great champagne? Is it fair? Is it average?" Your eyes will help you, and your nose, and your palate and even your ears. Your emotions will become involved, as well as your memory and intellectual capacity to analyze and evaluate.

So, you pour the wine into a clear, thin, crystal glass with no decorations to interfere with your awareness of the color and clarity. There is plenty of room left in the glass to allow the bouquet, fragrance or perfume to develop.

First, you look at the wine in the glass, noting the color which may range from a topaz, almost an amber, to the palest straw. It is not an invariable test, but often you will find that the sweeter champagnes are deeper in hue. As in a martini, the paler, the drier.

Palest of all is a brut blanc des blancs, pure white wine, made from all white grapes. This is a rarity among champagnes and, according to some knowledgeable folk, the current rage for blanc des blancs champagne among certain Parisian connoisseurs is "sheer affectation."

Yet a jury of four dedicated, unbiased (but not blindfolded) HOUSE BEAUTIFUL editors lost their collective hearts to a Taittinger 1950 blanc des blancs, tasted in the caves at Rheims. A real brut, it has no sugar added. So pale-gold that it has almost the greenish cast of a great Montrachet.

Pale Is Stylish

As in clothes, in paintings and decorations, fashions change in champagne. During the elegant Eighties and the luxurious Nineties, the most desirable champagnes were those which had, in the words of General d'Alès of the house of Piper Heidsieck, "the color of the eye of a partridge, l'oeil de perdrix—a lovely, indeterminate, Victorian shade of pinkish-topaz." Nowadays, the fashionable color among champagnes is many degrees lighter, the taste many degrees dryer.

The General's own Piper Heidsieck is a beautiful example of light and dry. The '49 which we tasted recently is as pale as the most sophisticated martini, with bubbles so fine that they seem to race together into a kind of Milky Way—as brut as brut can be!

Certainly brut is the modish type of champagne in most American and European circles.

However there are those who prefer a sweeter champagne. For them the "dosage" was invented! This is a syrup of pure cane sugar dissolved in a mixture of old champagnes.

The words on a bottle of champagne, which indicate its sweetness, are rather confusing. In terms of the amount of sugar added they are:

Brut—No dosage, or .5% to 1% sugar liquid.

Extra Dry—1% to 2% sugar liquid.

"Sec" (This is the most confusing term)—It is French for dry, but actually the wine isn't dry, according to our standards. It is also known in the trade as "American taste." Perhaps it was a generation ago, but it isn't any longer. In any case, sec indicates the addition of 3% to 6% sugar liquid.

"Demi-Sec" or half dry—7% to 10% sugar liquid.

"Doux"—Sweet (personal opinion—completely undrinkable) up to 15% sugar liquid.

Champagne Doux is said to have been popular in Czarist Russia and is now exported to South America.

WHAT about pink champagne? To quote Joseph Dargent again, "In the eyes of the champenois, pink champagne is a charming stunt; its color is pleasing to many drinkers, perhaps because this color mingled with the wine's effervescence gives an unusual and gay impression. However, pink champagne is, and probably will remain, exceptional, because the limpidity of normal champagne is one of its best factors of quality. Usually, white champagne is finer than pink. In part this is due to the fact that the juice from the first pressing is used for white champagne, whereas the secondary juice of the pressing is used for pink champagne, and the dark skins are permitted to remain a short while in the grape juice.

"Pink champagne had its origin, it seems, when a brilliant young heiress decided to have a champagne served at her wedding which would match the dresses she had chosen for her maids of honor."

Crystal-Bright

Lucent, transparent, pellucid, crystal-bright, these are some of the words used to describe one of the essential qualities of fine champagne. Its limpid clarity is not a gift of nature, but of art. For during the second fermentation in the evolution of the sparkling mousse, a deposit is formed in the wine which is a by-product of yeast from the air and minerals in the juice. This deposit does not affect the taste of the wine, but clouds it. The trick is to get the deposit out of the bottle without losing the bubbles.

How this is done is one of the most ingenious of wine-making skills, for all the tiny bits of sediment are coaxed to form around the cork. This is done by gradually shifting the position of the bottle from horizontal to a point where the wine stands on its head.

But first the bottles are vigorously shaken and put neck down into special racks, which hold them at an angle of 60 degrees. Then begins the picturesque ritual of remuage, the sly and skillful turning. Each bottle is marked on the bottom with a strip of white, the starting point. During a period of five weeks to three months, depending on the nature of the wine, each bottle is given a slight shake and turn, and gradually moved, still neck down, toward the vertical position. A skilled cellarmaster at the racks is like an organist at a giant keyboard, and some virtuosos can play a kind of tune as they work, for their hands move very fast, twisting and turning as many as 30,000 bottles in a day.

When the work has been completed, the wine held to the light (a candle in the olden days, an electric bulb now) will show a clear, white wine in a bottle whose neck and cork are dark with sediment. The bottle rests thus, neck down, for several years, so that the sediment solidifies. Then the disgorging comes. The necks of the bottles are placed in ice-brine water, which covers them only to the top of the sediment. A few minutes in this bath and a frozen wine forms in the neck around the cork. Now the steel wire clamp is removed and the cork withdrawn with pincers. The accumulated gas pressure is enough by itself to push the piece of ice filled with sediment out of the bottle. Because of the intense cold, the loss of gas and wine from the bottle is insignificant. At last, the champagne has a pure, gem-like sparkle.

Sparkles in Your Throat

"Champagne without sparkle is like a rose without scent. The most obvious characteristic of champagne is effervescence." Wrote the Abbé de Chaulieu in the 18th Century: "Scarcely did I see it, when suddenly from my mouth it entered my heart." Others have described it as "sparklers in your throat."

Quite apart from poesy, the size, quality and liveliness of the bubbles are studiously observed. The classical school of champagne connoisseurs will tell you that since slow fermentation results in small bubbles, the smaller the bubbles, the finer the quality of the wine.

Champagne is judged also by its activity, although this is not always an inherent quality of the wine. The type of glass and the temperature of the wine have considerable effect.

The traditional hollow-stemmed champagne glass encourages a fountain of sparkle, and so do certain imperfections in the crystal. It is for this reason that some devotées will even risk their diamonds to scrape a bit of roughness into the glass, so as to provoke the brilliant dancing of the wine.

A fine, velvety, not too ephemeral, white crown of mousse is another sign of excellence, but not too reliable, especially for a woman, because the slightest trace of oil from lipstick dissipates the foam instantly.

The height of affectation, according to most French connoisseurs, is the swizzle-stick. There was a time when so-called esthetes brought their own of silver or gold and jeweled! "With a few swift movements they could drive out of the glass the sparkle that took at least four years to put there." Some people say to you that even without the sparkle, champagne tastes good. But if you don't like bubbles, why have champagne? There are other wines.

Glassful of Life

Just as through the centuries the wines of Champagne have been altered to suit our changing tastes and requirements, so have the bottles and the glasses. Most popular through the generations has been a kind of trumpet-lily shape, called the "flute." Sometimes the stems have been short, sometimes long and slender; sometimes closed and sometimes hollow. In other epochs, glasses have been elaborately cut.

The classic champagne saucer is a comparatively recent development. Like the flaring trumpet, it has lost some popularity, especially among the connoisseurs of France, who consider such glasses better suited to the serving of cocktails or dessert. Now, preference is given to the tulip glass, or the demi-ballon, slender and deep, but not too wide at the rim. Such a glass facilitates the rising of the bubbles and also serves to concentrate the aroma. More and more often, especially in France, you will find that champagne is served from a fairly generous, all-purpose glass, which is suitable for water as well, and for almost any kind of red or white wine. It is a highly practical innovation and one which should be gratefully adopted in this country, what with our lack of closet space.

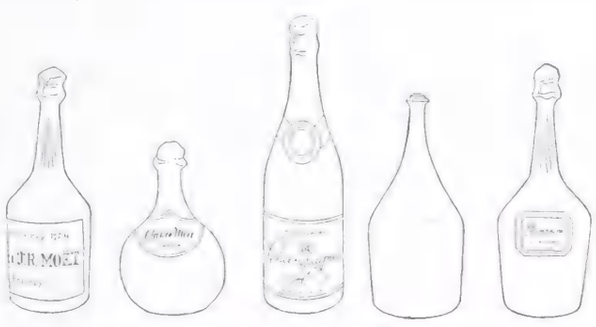
The right wine! The right glass! There is also a right way to pour champagne. The bottle should be held at the base, never around the neck; and if you are deft, you will present it with your thumb in the deep dimple underneath, the bottle resting on your four fingers, the label upward in full view. The bottle should be gently inclined over the glass, and the glass itself tilted so that the wine pours very slowly down the inside of the glass until it is half or at most three-fourths full.

Never, never put a lump of ice into champagne, "unless you wish to express complete disdain for it."

A fine champagne deserves fine treatment. Without it, even the best cannot survive. If champagnes are to be kept any length of time at home, you should provide a cool dark place. The temperature should not go above 55° F. or below 35° F. The coat closet of an apartment is not appropriate and neither is an exposed unheated cellar, nor even a wine cellar too close to the heated furnace!

Champagne bottles should always be stored on their sides, never upright, and they should be tilted so that the corks are always wet with wine. If not, the corks will dry out and shrink, and the precious sparkle will escape from the bottle. Improper storage is the cause of a great deal of flat champagne, and even the best of conditions offers no positive guarantee that all will be well with this or any other wine.



Chill and Serve Forth

The temperature at which champagne is served has considerable effect upon the enjoyment of it. Here in America we are inclined to go to extremes in many things, certainly in the chilling of champagne. This seems to be a national failing. Charles Braunhofer of Delmonico's described in his book, The Epicurean, in 1893 how to freeze champagne! Actually, there is no "correct temperature" for all kinds of champagne. As a general rule, the finest and most delicate wines should be served less chilled, for excessive cold destroys the more subtle nuances of taste. Somewhere between 45° and 50° F. should be about right, with 48° F. considered the classic mean. Below 44° F., champagne loses much, if not all, its fragrance. Above 50° F., it becomes heavy and loses its sparkle, for the cork often comes out with an explosion which carries away the foam and bubbles. Traditionalists insist that the best way to cool champagne is in an ice bucket, slowly, with ice and water, but in actual practice and especially in restaurants, even fine restaurants, the chilling is hurried by the addition of salt in the water.

Shapes in champagne glasses have their vogue and history, from the hollow-stemmed glass (left), through the gamut of possibilities.

Old champagne bottles flank the present model (3). The 17th Century label (2) and bottle (5) are still used for Dom Perignon cuvées.

What about the refrigerator, or the freezer? The purists will throw up their hands in horror. Yet, several hours of cooling in your refrigerator set at 45° is excellent and efficient. The freezer has its dangers. You might leave it too long and break the bottle. But if you are careful and will take the trouble to turn the bottle two or three times during a half-hour, the freezing compartment of your refrigerator, which is generally set about 0° F., will do a good job.

To most of us, the height of luxury would be to have a few bottles of champagne always on hand at the perfect drinking temperature in the refrigerator, but no Frenchman would condone such heresy.

There are, however, a number of informed people, including the very knowledgeable Julius Wile, who say that it is abruptly changing temperature which destroys champagne quality, that a wine can be quickly and easily ruined, or at least clouded, by being put into and then taken out of the refrigerator several times. He insists that champagnes may be kept for weeks and even months at a constant temperature in the refrigerator without suffering.

Some of the old wine-stewards' manuals suggest that the bottle of champagne, when removed from the ice bucket should be up-ended just once, to mix the cold wine in the bottom with that on top.

A bottle of champagne is among the easiest of all wines to open. You simply twist the wires till they break, and then pull the cork. But the correct ritual has its own ceremonial requirements. According to the Comité Interprofesionnel du Vin de Champagne, this is how it should be done: "Gently, silently, without losing any froth, holding the bottle slightly inclined. If necessary, use a special pair of nippers, if the cork shows signs of breaking. After opening, make sure that the cork has no bad smell (if it has, the bottle should immediately be set aside), then carefully wipe the rim of the neck with a clean napkin. To be quite sure of the quality, the contents of the bottle should not be served until the first glass has been tasted.

"Avoid wrapping the bottle in a napkin—as is frequently done—thus hiding the label as if one were ashamed of the name it bears. The decoration of a bottle is one of the charms. . . ."

The Bigger the Bottle

Far and away the largest amount of champagne comes in deeply dented, thick green glass bottles generally known as quarts, but holding actually about a fifth of a gallon, a smidgen more than 25 ounces. Caterers usually count on six servings from the so-called quart, and they figure at a wedding, for instance, on roughly three glasses per guest. But in addition to the regulation quart, there are ten other champagne bottles. The smallest, called the split or ¼ bottle, contains 6½ ounces. Then there is the so-called champagne pint or half-bottle holding 13 ounces, and an imperial pint containing 16 ounces.

The larger champagne bottles contain multiples of the champagne quart. There is a magnum, which is a two-quart bottle. The double magnum, often called a Jeroboam, holds four quarts. The Rehoboam, six quarts; Methuselah, eight quarts; Balthazar, sixteen quarts. The biggest, boldest, tallest, fattest of them all, is known as the Nebuchadnezzar—twenty quarts. That's a hundred and twenty glasses of champagne!

Bottles smaller than a quart are looked upon with some disdain by the experts, though you will find pints listed on the best wine cards all over the world. There seems to be some truth in the contention of the wine merchants that bigger means better among champagnes—up to a point. We know that air is the natural enemy of wine and that large champagne bottles contain proportionately more wine and less air than the smaller sizes. Splits, for some reason or other, are more likely to go flat than quart bottles. And magnums and double magnums do seem to have a finer flavor. They don't show their age as quickly. This improvement in flavor occurs only when the wine is actually fermented in the large bottle. At the present time, not much champagne is made in bottles larger than the magnum, because the danger of explosion and breakage is so great.

Moët et Chandon told us they still make a few Methuselahs. Filled, mind you, with champagne fermented in those eight-quart bottles! This is unusual. Generally, anything above a Jeroboam is filled from smaller bottles.

DECORATOR'S DIARY

Notes on news from the home furnishings market and how a decorator plots out ways to put it to best use

One of the fattest little sections of my resource file is the folder labeled "Iridescence." Almost every fabric house is producing something that could qualify, whether it's two-tone cotton chambray or changeable taffeta, or some of the glitter fabrics which understate the glitter by using colored metallic yarns, creating more of a glow than a gleam. Then there's the pearly look of Kappa Shell in place mats and lamps from Krusi.

Under work-of-art accessories, I've listed silvery rainbow-colored ceramics of Beatrice Wood, as marvelous as the sheen acquired by ancient glass buried underground. Also, a mobile of polished and rough abalone shells, giddy, pretty, and exquisitely made by the Natzlers.

And now comes iridescent leather, a new and subtly silver look in a finish called "Tulip Shadow" by American Leather Manufacturing Company. Eight soft, grayed-down colors of upholstery leather have been given this pleasant "pearly" look. What lovely thing will they think of next?

Came back to the studio today with that exhilarating feeling of Mission Accomplished. Young Midge Henley with her champagne tastes and you-know-what income has ceased to be a problem child—anyway, so far as her living room draperies are concerned. Found the precise solution for her white and silver room in a new metallic-printed rayon and cotton at Golding Decorative Fabrics. It's off-white, printed on a soft, non-glaring silver ground, has the feel of a fabulous raw silk import, is 50 inches wide, costs less than $4 a yard, and if this isn't fit for a Florentine prince, then Florentine princes don't know what's good for them. Off-white pattern is a large-scale scrolled leaf and flower motif, typical of rich old Renaissance damask patterns, and is appropriately labeled "Medici." Repeat measures about 18 inches high and almost as wide, but isn't overpowering when it's hung because the pattern blends into the drapery folds. I know what Midge's first question is going to be, for her practicality takes curious and praiseworthy turns, as for instance when she insisted on air-conditioning the apartment so her white scheme would be feasible in this sooty city. She's going to say, "It's lovely, but will that silver pattern crock off or turn black?" And my answer, researched from headquarters, will be, "Don't worry your head. The pattern is printed in one of the new metallic inks that are compounded with resins so that the glitter has a long life without coddling."

Vera Dalton collects rare and beautiful snuff boxes the way other people collect stamps. She'd just as soon buy a Battersea box as look at it: Just like every other collector, she is constantly searching for a more convenient, more beautiful, more spacious way to house her collection. She's as down to earth as a diamond mine, and I'm very glad for her that she can acquire such lovely things. But I'm also glad for myself that I remembered her problem the minute I laid eyes on Kittinger's new collector's chest. Besides furnishing nine shallow, baize-lined drawers for her collection, it's going to add elegant sparkle to her living room.

I've chosen the chest covered in silver leaf, a faintly clouded, rich finish, with simple ring hardware in brass. It also comes in a finish of malachite green or Chinese red, noteworthy because this business of color in furniture is something new. Chest itself measures about 12" high, 18" deep, and 38" wide, and can be bought alone or with a Queen Anne type of mahogany table which can serve as its base.

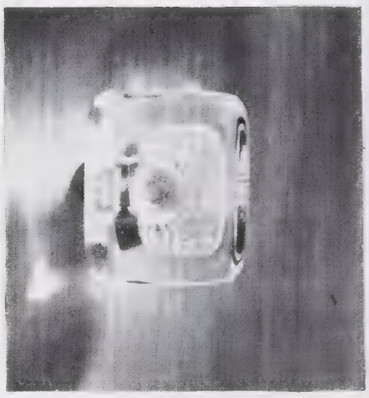

Table is 40⅜" long, 26¾" high, usable height which seems to be a specialty of Kittinger's. Alone this is a good level for a cocktail, coffee or serving table, and works out very comfortably for a casual game of cards or Scrabble. I can also visualize the chest sitting up handsomely on one of those square-legged rectangular Chinese tables. In fact, I'd prefer it in Vera's room which is almost totally modern when you analyze its upholstered furniture and its hand-loomed rug and fabrics, but definitely faces east with its Celadon bowls and the Siamese bronzes and Indian artifacts. Must remember that table comes 78¼" long. With two cabinets on it, it's a natural set-up for silver and placement storage in a dining room or dining-living room, or for a chest of drawers in a dressing room. Table and chest rise to just 36¼ inches—not a bad height for a little standing mirror.

The House of Italian Handicrafts was the last place I should have thought of looking for a doorknob, but wonders never cease. For what do I find dazzling my eyes on my last visit there but a glittering, gold-flecked lineup of Venetian glass, looking for all the world like a collection of superior paper weights. And doorknobs they are, perfect jewels of doorknobs, some round, some fluted, some rectangular, in all the rich reds and greens and yellows of typical Venetian glass, some peppered with gold dust, some looking as if a thousand flowers were captured inside. They're all made—by hand of course—on the fabled glass-making island of Murano, across the lagoon from Venice. All have been thoughtfully equipped with brass fitments which permit them to be screwed to a door, and so designed that they will fit the shank of the standard American-size doorknob.

I see these as distinguishing decorative accents on furniture as well as on doors and can think of at least three houses where they might serve as drapery tie-backs. I see them used as towel holders in an elegant little lavatory. And my favorite of all, a gleaming rectangle of ice-clear crystal which seems to encase a tiny pool of golden bubbles, is already destined to pull the sliding doors of the built-in wardrobe in Mrs. MacMurry's gold and white dressing room. This knob, an impressive 3½ x 2¾ inches, is a lot of opulence at remarkably little price, for it costs far less than $10.

Honesty forces this notation. Jean Dinsmore, one of the few clients on my books who could order up carpenters, masons, and workroom craftsmen at the drop of an idea and never feel the pinch, is probably the most eager do-it-yourselfer on the whole roster. This year she's been particularly enamored of these new plastic films with the adhesive backing that stick wherever you put them. Everything in her kitchen, with the possible exception of the pancake turner, has been covered—by her, of course—in pink vinyl. And it was I who encouraged her to cover the wooden shelves in the guest bathroom and the linen closet with imitation black marble "Con-Tact," the stuff Cohn-Hall-Marx makes of Monsanto's Ultron vinyl film.

I was beginning to think enough is enough when she called one morning to say she was thinking of covering a wall of her teen-age kids' hi-fi room with the new "Con-Tact" pattern that looks more like red brick than red brick itself. You could almost feel the mortar that wasn't there! But the next news I got, in the same conversation, was that she'd found a cotton carpet, of all things, that you can stick down on the floor in 18" "tiles." It works on the same principle as the pressure-sensitive vinyl. It is backed by paper marked off for easy measuring and cutting. You rip off the paper and plunk the sticky side of the rug down wherever you want it. You can rip it off as cleanly as cellophane tape, change a worn tile for a new one or vary the color or whip them all off and make the floor bare again.

Sticky brick

Turned out that she had got hold of two good ideas. Two widths of the 18" wide vinyl were just right to cover a wall jog in the pine-paneled playroom, right at the crucial spot where the kids set up their refreshment cart. The rugged vinyl protects the wood from Coke splashes and food spatters, while the brick pattern looks suitably casual with the room's pine ad calico. There's an off-white brick pattern, too, I hear, and a new "Con-Tact" tape, in ¾-inch and 1½-inch widths for covering seams, binding lampshades, framing pictures or whatever other use you can think up.

As for the sticky rugs, called "Karpet-Squares" and made by Allen Industries, she suggested sticking a double row of squares on the walls across the top and along the side of the sofa beds in young Lisa's room. (There's one bed in each corner.) This improvises a soft, nice-to-lean-against headboard and backrest, in a turquoise which goes prettily with the colors in the chintz spreads, although there are 12 colors to choose from.

Everybody knows about Hitchcock chairs. But if anyone had told me prior to last week that you could furnish a whole bedroom with Hitchcock furniture, I would have been tempted to state, as politely as possible, that they did not know what they were talking about. Fortunately, I was never tempted, and now I know better.

Achieved enlightenment the week end I spent with Ellen Dillon in Simsbury. Admired a little one-drawer table, fitted up as a dressing table, she had in the guest room. Her grandmother's, she said, and she was looking for another. Could I help? Said I'd try though I wasn't optimistic. Not that the table was specially rare. It was a standard early Victorian type you used to see a lot of in country antique shops, but they seem to have disappeared. What did she want it for? That little bedroom under the eaves. Wanted to fix it up as a second guest room. Didn't need a chest of drawers. What week-end guest ever put anything away in a drawer? Probably go off without it if he did. But a dressing table is important.

All that chatter had nothing whatsoever to do with our decision to drive over to Riverton Saturday morning to have a look at the Hitchcock chair factory. We'd both heard about the three young men who had bought the tumbled-down brick building where Lambert Hitchcock had made his famous chairs in the eighteen twenties and thirties. We knew they had put it together again and for the last six years had been making chairs there exactly like the originals, stencilled with the orginal nameplate "L. Hitchcock. Hitchcocksville. Conn. Warranted." But since neither of us had ever heard that Mr. Hitchcock made anything but chairs, we were quite unprepared to hit upon the makings of Ellen's second guest room.

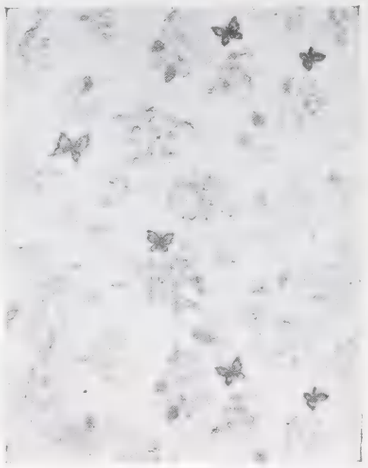
First thing we lighted on was the one-drawer table I had held out so little hope for. There it was, almost exactly like Ellen's grandmother's, but lacquered black and stencilled with gold in the unmistakable Hitchcock manner. "Console table," they called it at the factory.



Item Two: a "Settler" bench to go with it—a rush seat on a leg-and-stretcher base similar to the base of Hitchcock chairs.

Item Three: a mirror in a Hitchcock frame.

Item Four and most unexpected: a headboard. There were two, but we decided on the simplest which was just a series of slender spindles with a decorated flat piece across the top. To go with that, there was a two-drawer "work table" which hardly anyone could tell from a night table. And figuring that Ellen's tiny room could just about hold one chair, we took down the number of the armless Hitchcock rocker. All these pieces are original Hitchcock designs, we were told, and come in a choice of finishes—black, antique maple or antique cherry. Some are already in stores like W. & J. Sloane and Lord & Taylor.

Drove home feeling very pleased with ourselves for having accomplished a month's job in a Saturday morning. I'm still musing about the one piece I liked best, the spindle-back Hitchcock settee. Must find a place to use that, even if I have to buy it for my own apartment.

One of the prettiest wallpapers I've seen in a long while shows up in Imperial's new line—and just in time to turn that dismal little hall room at the Waltons' into a fresh, bright guest room. It's a pattern of roses, but roses with the crisp, stylishness of a pen-and-ink drawing, black on white, punctuated every so often with a bright turquoise-blue butterfly which has just a hint of pink in its wings. I'm going to make the ceiling match the butterflies; I'll curtain the windows with white shutters; the little brass bed will have a white chintz spread and a turquoise underskirt; the rug will be white cotton; the chest of drawers black lacquer, and the accessories Bristol glass, or a reasonable facsimile of same. And come to think of it, this same paper could be a great success in a breakfast room, a kitchen or a bathroom.

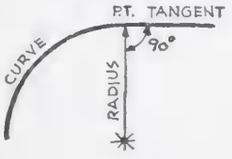
How to improve your curves

By NELVA M. WEBER
Landscape Architect



Form is a most important part of the landscape. The home gardener with an artistic eye, as well as the landscape architect, is aware of the form or shape of a terrace or lawn, the form or pattern of a garden or flower bed, the form of a specimen tree, shrub planting or delphinium.

Form and line are inseparable, for line makes the edge or outline of form. All about us are lines—straight, curved, or a combination of the two; there is no reason why they cannot be graceful flowing lines. The landscape architect is interested in a beautiful line wherever it occurs—in a parkway, a drive, a path, the edging of a flower bed, a fence line or the edge of a shrub border as it joins the lawn.

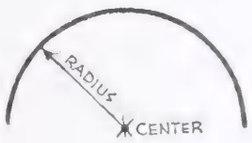
The engineering term for line is "alignment." So far as I know, no one has ever bothered to set down any suggestions for good alignment. The ones suggested below are my own, based on experience in parkway design, which is not as far removed from garden design as one might at first suspect. The same principles that make a parkway pleasant to look at, and easy and safe to travel, can improve the home drive and the garden walk. A garden path with pleasant alignment is a delight to both the eye and the feet, yet costs no more than one of clumsy design. Often a very small refinement can make the difference.

The simplest kind of curve is a circular curve—one that is part of a circle, such as the schoolboy makes with his first compass. It has one center and one radius.

A straight line, when touching and joining a curve, is here called a tangent.

When a circular curve is joined to a tangent at P.T. (point of tangence) angle is always 90° between radius and tangent.

Sooner or later one meets a compound curve—a curve with more than one radius and more than one center. If a wedge of pie is cut from an 8″ tin and is placed beside a wedge of pie cut from a 9″ tin, the edge of both crusts together illustrates a compound curve.



This compound curve is made up of circular curve "A" and circular curve "B" which join at P.C.C. (point of compound curvature). The P.C.C. and the 2 centers are in a straight line.

If the radius becomes regularly and progressively longer or shorter, compound curve becomes spiral.

This compound curve approaches a spiral in form.

A simple or circular curve has only one center and one radius.

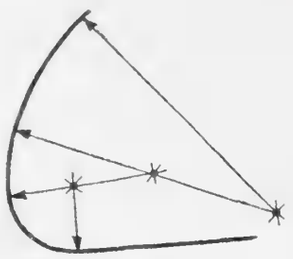
SUGGESTION 1



Don't use a tangent to join two curves going in the same direction. It results in a "broken back" effect. Instead, join the two curves directly into a pleasantly flowing compound curve.

When two curves are joined by a tangent the result is a "broken back." The effect is more pleasant if curves are joined directly (see previous sketches).

SUGGESTION 2

When a long curve must be joined to a long straight line traveling in an opposing direction, make the transition with a compound curve. In other words, ease the long curve into the straight line gradually by using curves of progressively shorter radii.

A long radius curve is "eased" into an opposing straight line by introducing transitional curves. This is useful where a driveway joins a street.

A third kind of curve is a reverse curve—one which travels first in one direction, then in the opposite.

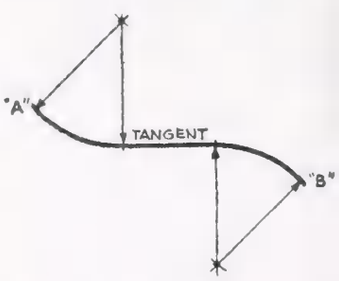
When making a reverse curve by joining two curves of opposite directions, always connect them with a short tangent. This straightaway gives the eye a second to adjust itself before sweeping in the opposite direction. This is a very subtle refinement of line that is all too often overlooked by laymen and engineers alike. It can make the difference between a smooth flowing line and a wiggly one.

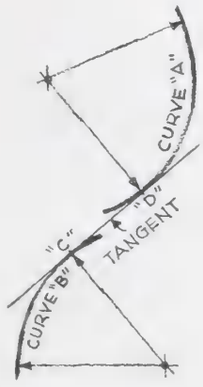
Two directionally opposed curves in opposite directions may be joined without a tangent.



The same curves sketched above, but joined together with a short tangent or straight line, result in a more pleasant reverse curve.

SUGGESTION 4

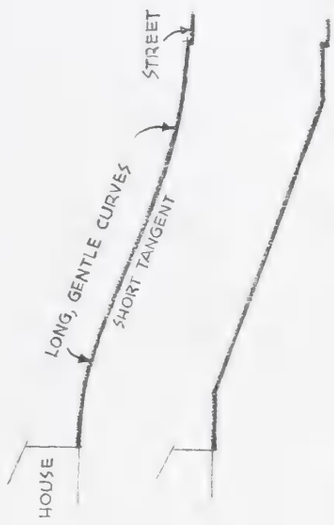
A combination of long radii and short tangents produces the most attractive reverse curves. This becomes apparent as one lays out the line of a path or the edge of a shrub border. Wiggles ruin many a curved path; lengthen the radius and the wiggle becomes a flowing line.



A reverse curve with short radii and a long tangent is acceptable.

Points A and B and direction of tangents are the same as in previous sketch. Line AB, though, is more pleasant with longer radii, shorter tangent.

The layman may study curves on sheets of graph paper in which one square on the paper equals one foot on the ground. Outdoors, a good firm stake becomes the center of the curve. While a helper holds the end of a steel tape against the stake, a second person measures off the radius and lays out the curve with wooden plant labels spaced a foot or so apart. Then a rubber hose is laid along the line of labels and a smooth curve marked out with an edger or narrow spade.



In staking out a reverse curve, locate centers and stake out both circular curves using plant labels as before. The two curves should not touch each other. To make the tangent, stretch the tape between the two curves, so that it touches both of them.

When laying out a reverse curve on the ground, stake curves A and B so they do not touch. Stretch a cord or tape between them so that it touches curves at C and D, forming tangent.

For those who wish to do free-hand curves directly on the ground without benefit of study on paper, there is no better way than to use wooden plant labels which are easy to force into the soil and easy to adjust until the line looks right. A hose laid against the labels helps to iron out minor irregularities in your design.

So far we have been concerned with horizontal curves—those laid flat upon the ground. Vertical curves or those in which there is a change of elevation, are very important in the landscape. If a good reverse curve is turned vertically it becomes an ogee curve, the most attractive profile to use in grading a sloping piece of land or a steep bank. There is a broad gentle curve at the top of the slope, a short straight tangent in the middle of the slope and a broad gentle curve flowing in the opposite direction at the foot of the slope. There is no awkward straight line effect.

If you use the ogee curve in grading a slope between your house and the street, the effect is more attractive than if flat terraces at the top and bottom are joined by a straight slope.

This same principle can be adapted to sloping walks and drives. The curve at the top gives the car an opportunity to level off as it slows down to enter the garage. The gentle curve at the foot of the slope makes possible a safe turn into the street.

AN INTERVIEW . . .

more clothes, books and equipment than the average couple. We like to use our things and have them readily available. So we planned our house for storage. It was built around a storage core (see page 189.) As you have seen, the house appears severe and simple. Yet it contains ten times more instantly available storage than the average house of the same floor space.

Do you think that your friends like this house?

We have never explained or asked anyone to like this house. We do not care what the Joneses think. We like it—it is us. Still, we have found that the average person is surprised that such a new image of a house is such a pleasant one. It is different—but unlike many contemporary or "modern" houses, it is not a cold, mechanical box. We selected our architect because he had the same feeling as we for proportions, shapes and textures. We talked at great length on exactly what we wanted and expressed emphatically our definite likes and dislikes.

We are primarily interested in tomorrow, yet we know that our personal luxury habits of yesterday cannot be ignored. We tried to wed the two. No one could possibly tell where the architect started and we went on. Many details, furniture and features were designed by us. We believe that everything, and we mean everything, must be cohesive.

We think yours is a good, even a great house. How do you think the average person can get one nearly as good?

I would like to mention an old cliché: Form follows function. This is often laughed at by professionals, probably because it is so true. I think the phrase is over-simplified and I would like to extend it. There are many good ways to make something work, there are also many good forms. I believe the creative solution is the one that grows from the problem. How good it is results from the designer's understanding of both good form and good function. Function is not all physical; it is psychological in various degrees with different people. Psychology is often part of the problem and should affect the form. To get a good house, first, you must know how you want to live, second, you must get a good, intelligent designer, sympathetic to people, their problems and their desires, one who understands both form and function. Then you and he must give and take—just a little.

Do you think modern architecture is an art form?

Not to begin with, but it could well be in the end. A painter aims from the beginning at creating an esthetic painting. If you start the same way with a house, you won't have a house; you will have a personal expression of your architect's idea of art.

A house is shelter first of all, and today it should be good shelter with numerous wonderful things to work with. Make good use of what you want in every possible way. For example, our house has three long "elements": an overhang for the southern sun, shelter at the front entrance and shade on the west balcony. As you can see in the living room picture on page 186, a large element crosses the narrower two and all three are exposed in the living room. They are visible indoors and outdoors, but they have a definite function in addition to their esthetic form. We have no wall studding, just 2"-thick tongue-and-groove, solid-heart redwood boards. The elements carry the electrical system which "bounces" light from the ceiling above. They are the one structure outdoors unifying land and house. The large one cantilevers 24 feet out at each side. Indoors they are planned to divide the areas esthetically. They provide the top rack for all the sliding doors and screens.

You call a house a shelter. How does one achieve a beautiful shelter for oneself?

A shelter reflects the times. We don't wear nineteenth-century clothes or drive a horse and buggy. Today we have materials and a technology undreamed of at the turn of the century. Why should the shelter concept lie stagnant, when minds and means are so far ahead? In an interdependent, complex, industrial civilization, man's home offers him his only real private hours of existence. His adventure in living can be accomplished if he knows how he wants to live. I believe the duty of the architect is to design a home to fully accomplish this, but he can do so only if you tell him how you want to live. If you do, he is capable of rendering you a great service and a beautiful shelter, one that is for you.

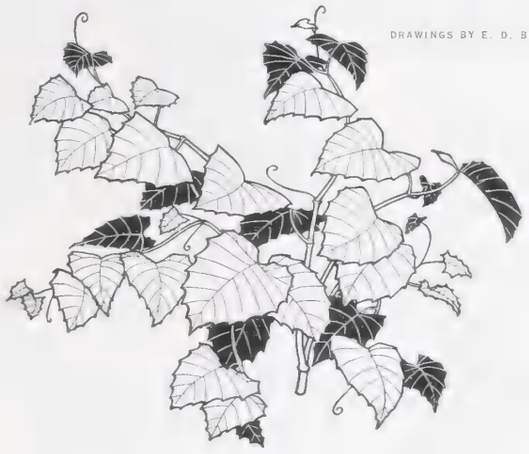
Today's indoor vines



By SYDNEY S. RICH

Vines are the most useful, yet seldom used, indoor plants. Fluid in growth, taking the shape of their support, they can be made an integral part of a room more effectively than the usual house plants. Of the evergreen vines suitable for indoor use, relatives of the familiar grape ivy (Cissus rhombifolia) are exceptionally handsome and reliable. Here are three species.

Cissus Voinieriana, new to this country, was a favorite wall cover in private European conservatories. Leaf segments are grayish when young, brownish when mature, larger than those of common grape ivy. Provide strong support, such as bamboo poles, or let trail. Sometimes called Vitis.

DRAWINGS BY E. D. BILLS

Cissus antarctica, the kangaroo vine, is glossy green and leathery. A plant with several stems, it grows both upward and over the side of the pot. Amenable to most indoor conditions and tolerant of erratic waterings, this is one you can leave without qualms over long week ends.

Cissus capensis, rich green with rusty leaf edges, is the "evergreen grape" of California. In Carmel I've seen it on wires covering a dining room ceiling. It can also be trained on slender poles to make much of the leaf shape or on a square trellis as a green indoor screen.

Sliding windows require no maintenance and are removable for cleaning. Operation interferes with neither curtains nor plants outside. Reynolds Metals.

What Is Prefabrication?

If you are thinking about buying a prefabricated house, you may be bothered by the meaning of the word, for some prefabricated materials (like plumbing fixtures and windows) have long gone into the most conventionally built house. Where does one draw the line?

The answer is, you don't draw a line. There is a trend among all builders to make their houses out of fewer but larger parts. Instead of buying thousands of little pieces to put together on the site, they like to assemble their houses with larger wall panels which have windows and doors already installed. They like to buy ready-to-assemble gable ends, roof trusses, storage walls and many other big parts. The use of these big components, as they are called, is a new cost-saving trend.

Among the larger prefabricating companies, this trend to components is already in full swing. Large sections are made in the factory and are assembled on the site. Because the house can be assembled faster, the on-site construction costs may be somewhat less.

In study-hobby bedroom, twin chests framed in black combed plywood have smooth, white sliding doors for style interest. They fit nicely against short wall, provide storage for materials or for use of guest.

But not all prefabricated houses are put together from panels. Some firms send out trucks with an entire house in one load. The lumber is pre-cut and ready for the builder, but none of it is assembled. As such houses are erected, they look like houses of conventional construction, but the builder has saved time because he does no cutting on the job. So, in fact, the term "prefabrication" is as broad as the building industry itself.

Nearly every one of the 100 or more prefab manufacturers varies from the others in the way he goes about it. Whatever the method, it has meant good news to the house-buying public in many areas. The prefabbers have moved in with the new architect-designed houses and with new ideas which have sparked up local builders to discard their obsolete and dowdy stock plans. However, in fairness to many efficient builders, it must be said that prefabbers do not always deliver the most house for the money. There are many levels of quality in prefabrication, just as there are in all types of merchandise. Some towns have highly efficient builders turning out very good values in conventionally built houses. So it is impossible to make any blanket statements about relative competitive values.

Generous lavatory counter is separated from tub and water closet compartment allowing the two areas to be used simultaneously with a degree of privacy.

Compact bath adjoins master bedroom creating a private suite. All components, light and plumbing fixtures, medicine cabinet, and wall finishes are chosen for good design and utility usually associated with custom-built houses.

You can't buy direct

Most prefabricated houses are sold only through local dealers. (That is, companies that are builders who assemble the parts and components, and finish the house for you to buy complete.) If there is not one in your city for the house on these pages, or for another that interests you, there isn't much you can do about it. Look in the phone book for the name of the prefab firm you want, or phone your local home builders' association. If you live in the Midwest, chances are you have several dealers representing several different manufacturers in your town, for the Midwest is the "prefab belt." There are dealers for many of the larger prefab firms scattered pretty well throughout the country, but fewer in the Southwest and the Rocky Mountain states, and relatively few along the West Coast. If there is no home builder in your area who handles the house you want, you might as well forget it or prepare to wait. You cannot buy a house direct and have it put together. And when you find a dealer, he probably will not want to build on your lot. He may sell you a prefab only if you buy in his tract or land development. (Many prefabbers are building new branch plants this year and most are recruiting new dealers, so chances are getting better for you to find the house you want.)

How Much Variety?

Many of the companies offer quite a number of variables on their stock models. These variables, from which you pick and choose, cause the houses to vary considerably in price. But they are also the key to getting the variety that keeps your house from looking exactly like your neighbor's. If you become interested in a particular model, probe deeply into the matter of how many different choices you have: in surfacing materials, in types of heating, in the size of the lot, in the color scheme and so on. In the house shown in this issue, for instance, you may choose either summer air cooling by Stewart Warner or an attic fan from the Hunter Co. You can also buy it with or without the family room or with or without screening for the porch.

Naturally these variables alter the price you pay. So it is very hard to talk about fixed prices in prefabrication, for it is these variables that permit you to have the advantages of prefabrication without the liabilities of rubber-stamp housing. Only the local dealer can quote you a price after you have decided on the model, the land and all the accessories and extras, such as paved terraces, brick garden walls and the like.

elementary instruction books and simple repertoire of the kind which had been available for the piano.

As such materials were devised and brought into use, the organ was found to be one of the most rewarding of instruments for the amateur who wants the joy of music-making with a minimum investment of time and effort in study.

Because of the ease of tone production, it is one of the easiest instruments to play. Just put down the keys and pedals gently, and you release a flood of colorful sound, tinged with shimmering romantic warmth, or reflecting the stateliness of the cathedral.

The organ is one of only a few instruments on which a single player can produce music which is well rounded. Each key can be made to sound not just one tone, but a number of tones at different levels of pitch, in several octaves. Thus, a simple three-toned chord may take on orchestral richness through our selection of stops. Changes of registration may be brought on by a flick of the finger.

Beginners of all ages have proved that it is feasible to take up organ study directly, with little or even no previous keyboard training.

Concert organists say that their recitals were never before so well attended. Is this due to the fact that the electric organs have entered so many living rooms? I believe so. Organ playing has become the hobby of many families—and of every member of the family—helping to bind them to a life which is home-centered. It is also an effective agent for building music into the lives of children. Teachers tell us that the child who asks for organ lessons does not have to be urged to practice.

On the other hand, the number of adults in organ classes today is approximately equal to the number of younger pupils. Overcoming timidity, doubt and inertia, these mature organ fans have embarked on an adventure to satisfy a long-suppressed desire for musical self-expression. They have been rewarded not only by enjoyment, but also by finding a means of self-renewal, a contrast to routine and tension. This in particular they have discovered: Although listening is an indispensable part of our contact with music, the making of music is far superior to listening in affording emotional release.

Just how easy will your first lesson assignments be? Dozens of the melodies you want to play can be accompanied by just three chords. You'll learn those chords speedily, and go on to add dozens of others to your musical vocabulary. Don't let the pedals bother you—the foot motions used in playing them are as natural as those employed in driving a car. As for the melodies—you'll manage these readily enough, on a handful of white and black keys. There are even short-cut devices available for people who really want to make it easy for themselves. For example, you can read at sight from visual representations of chords and melodies which are extremely easy to read. Later you will acquire greater skill, if you wish, with practice.

Whatever your degree of skill, let loose on the manuals and pedals the rhythms in your fingers and feet! In this pursuit you will find joy and a lift for your spirit.

Most chairs have at least one of nine major faults. See how the next one you sit in stacks up against this checklist:

Fault No. 1. No support for the lower back. This is probably the commonest fault in furniture, and it leads to acute physical discomfort.

As a case in point, a businessman complained of a backache every morning when he arrived at the office. He regularly rode to work in a taxi. The prescription was: ride the subway instead (at an hour when he could get a seat). Subway seats are sensibly designed, with a forward roll at the back to give support to the all-important lumbar curve. But many taxi seats, and many automobile seats—especially if the car upholstery is old—fall away from the lower back at the most critical point.

A chair back should have some extra padding to fit your lower back. The old-fashioned upholstered rockers our grandparents rocked in were ideal in that respect. You can achieve the same effect by propping a small cushion against the small of your back. Sitting for a long time without such support can throw so much work on your back muscles and cause them so much fatigue that these hours of "relaxing" leave you tense, nervous and worn out.

Fault No. 2. Too-high armrests. A high armrest pushes your shoulders up and forward. If you keep them there for any length of time, stiffness and pain across the shoulders and in the back of the neck may result.

Those big upholstered arm chairs that look so comfortable are often bad offenders in this respect. You sink down so far that the armrests become relatively high. After an hour or two you want to get a pillow to sit on or else to bury your elbows in the cushions to pull the shoulders down by the weight of your arms and stretch the cramped shoulder and neck muscles. In this type of chair, furniture makers should either lower the armrests, raise the seats or make them firmer. If springs are used, they should be of some sagless type that won't give way with wear.

A desk or work table that's too high in relation to your chair has the same effect as too-high armrests. It starts muscles aching in your neck, shoulders and upper back between the shoulder blades.

Fault No. 3. Too scooped a back. A scooped chair, such as the barrel or Windsor chair and the old style Pullman "Parlor" chair (still prevalent), rounds your back, rolls your shoulders forward, makes you flat-chested and may cause severe muscle strain in these areas of the body. The proper way for the chair to support you, from the standpoint of your muscles, is to allow your shoulder blades to drop back slightly behind the center of your spine at shoulder level. Libraries, conference rooms and tea rooms commonly have the scooped-back or Windsor-style wooden chair.

These would probably arouse more protest except for the fact that in studying or eating you manage to lean on the table most of the time and so get away from the back of the chair. What a pity, for libraries and restaurants are just the places where one should be able to lean back and relax in comfort!

This principle applies to any chair that reaches as high as the shoulder blades, but a short chair may be scoop-backed to fit the lumbar region.

Fault No. 4. Insufficient slope to the back. Any chair with a nearly vertical back forces you to droop forward in a round-shouldered position. The antique ladder-back is a classic example. If the back were tilted 15 to 20 degrees behind the vertical, you would find it more comfortable.

The familiar straight dining-room chair, the erect ballroom chair, even if it has a stuffed velvet seat, and the gilt French parlor chair that's "simply adorable to look at" may be menaces to the human frame if sat in for any length of time.

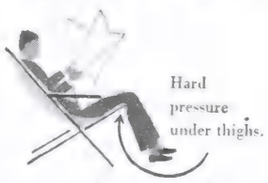
I recently attended a medical convention in Atlantic City where an audience of 500 doctors sat in those beautiful little straight ballroom chairs. After half an hour I never saw so much squirming and turning in all my life! Every one of those restless people was trying to find a position that would allow him to relax and lean back.

The makers of posture chairs try to provide slope by putting in the swivel back. One trouble is that many swivel backs are too unstable to provide any real support. When they keep on tipping backward and don't stop soon enough, it's just as bad as having no back to the chair.

Fault No. 5. Too short a back. Have you ever come out of the movies with a stiff and aching neck? If the back of the movie seats were high enough to support your upper back and neck, you'd be more comfortable. Try the back row some evening and lean your head against the wall. If practical neck rests could be devised for movie and theater seats, they would add immeasurably to one's enjoyment of the show.

Usually patients with shoulder and neck pain are advised not to go to the theater or a movie until they are 90 per cent recovered.

Fault No. 6. Jack-knifing at the hips or at the knees. The ideal sitting position requires at least a 90 degree angle at the waist and also at the knees. This is the minimum: usually a wider open angle is preferred. If your hips and knees are jack-knifed into a sharper angle than 90 degrees, overstretching of the back muscles follows, together with shortening and cramping of the muscles behind the bent knees, including the calf muscles. If you're long-legged, jack-knifing at the knees usually occurs when you sit on a bar or lunch counter stool and hook your heels over a too-high rung, with your toes pointed downward. Patients with calf-muscle cramps, a common complaint at night, are often instructed to sleep with their feet in the opposite position, that is, flat against a footboard, so as to stretch the calf muscles.



Jack-knifing at the hips occurs in any chair which has a seat that sinks way down and has a relatively firm front edge. Thus your hips sag below your knees. This may seem very comfortable at first, but it soon starts a backache because the curve of your lower back is distorted.

A common cause of jack-knifing at the hips is an automobile driver's seat when the springs are old and saggy. Your rear end sinks down and you're caught. You can't sit forward because your feet are engaged with the pedals. You just keep driving until your back muscles protest and you have to stop the car and get out for a walk. One solution is to sit on a horizontal, wedge-shaped cushion while driving to raise the seat at the back and so prevent the jack-knifing.

Fault No. 7. Chairs that give you "shelter legs." During World War II physicians in London noted an astonishing number of cases of swollen feet, some resulting in thrombosis of veins. Mystery was cleared up when it was found that these people had been sleeping at night in folding deck chairs in the underground air raid shelters. The circulation of the blood to and from the lower legs was partially cut off by pressure which the edge of the chair exerted underneath the thigh, just above the knees, where the main artery and veins cross the bone. The resulting condition of pain and swelling has been aptly called "shelter legs."

But it doesn't take war only to produce this condition. Any chair or sofa with a soft seat and a high hard edge at the front may do it.

The weight of your thighs against this edge compresses the large femoral blood vessels.

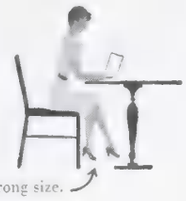
Chairs can be misfits in width as well as in depth. This chair is so wide for the lady that actually she can sit in only part of it. Instead of supporting her entire body, it is no more than an uneasy perch. But see how comfortably it fits the man.

I recall a woman who was firmly convinced that she had heart trouble because her ankles sometimes swelled up enormously. On questioning her it was found she took a deck chair up to the roof of her apartment house in good weather and reclined in it for several hours in the sun. There was nothing wrong with her heart. The trouble was with the chair.

Women who have short legs should be especially mindful of the kind of chairs they sit in. A petite woman in her forties once asked why her legs and feet often became numb and went to sleep. As she sat describing her symptoms, I noticed that her legs from the knees down were unusually short and her feet dangled without touching the floor. "There's your trouble," I said, pointing. Whenever this woman rode in buses or taxis, or went out to committee meetings or to the theater or sat at a meal, the weight of her dangling legs compressed the blood vessels under her thighs and shut off the circulation.



She had a foot stool made with folding legs four inches high, which would fit inside a brief case. Now she takes this everywhere, and her symptoms are gone.

The average straight chair measures 17 inches from the front of the seat down to the floor. But some omen have legs that measure only 5 or even 14 inches from undereath the knee to the heel.

Fault No. 8. Chairs that have ucket seats. The bucket chair hich is in vogue right now has a efinite fault from the standpoint f your bodily structure. Nature ntended you to sit on the center f your buttocks and supplied you ith two somewhat prominent bony tructures, called the ischial tuerosities, in the very middle of ach buttock to support the heavy eight of the upper half of the ody. In other words, your body hould be held up by bone structre, not muscle work. The bucket eat undoes this work of nature. It uts the weight on the sides of the uttocks instead of in the center, so he center sags rolling the thighs nward. If this distortion lasts, it roduces a discomfort.

Fault No. 9. Chairs that are the rong size for you. What a pity urniture stores don't carry chairs f good design made up like clothing, in different sizes. A perfectly designed chair that fulfills all the eight requirements listed here will not be right for you at all if it's the wrong size. Yet it would seem obvious that a chair the right size is just as necessary as a dress the right size—or more necessary.

Wrong size.

Every big man has felt the strain of sitting in too cramped a position and every little woman has wished for a chair her size when her feet didn't touch the floor or her back wouldn't reach the back of the chair because the seat was too high or too deep.

It seems to me that in selecting furniture, you should know your own measurements just as you

(Please turn the page)

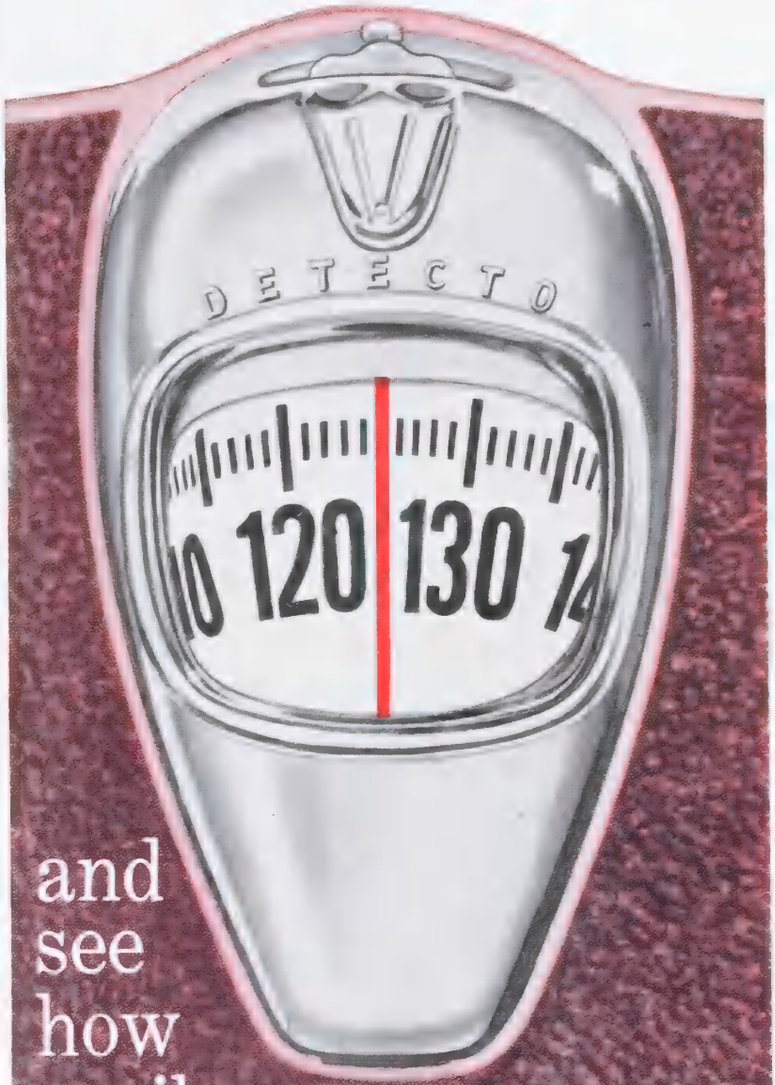
Back curves to fit spine.

Armrest is comfortable; slight rise of front affords most restful position.

Rolled front edge drops off, avoids under-thigh pressure; low seat helps, too.

All rockers are not perfect seats, but since they tilt back to the degree the occupant desires, they usually provide a comfortable slope. A neck cushion would make this a cozier lounge chair.



Armrest and game table top are at same level, good for writing, too.

No pressure under thighs for this tall man.

Back is well supported.

For writing or playing a table game, forearms should rest on the chair arm on a level with the table top. Back of chair should support upper and lower back; feet should rest on floor.

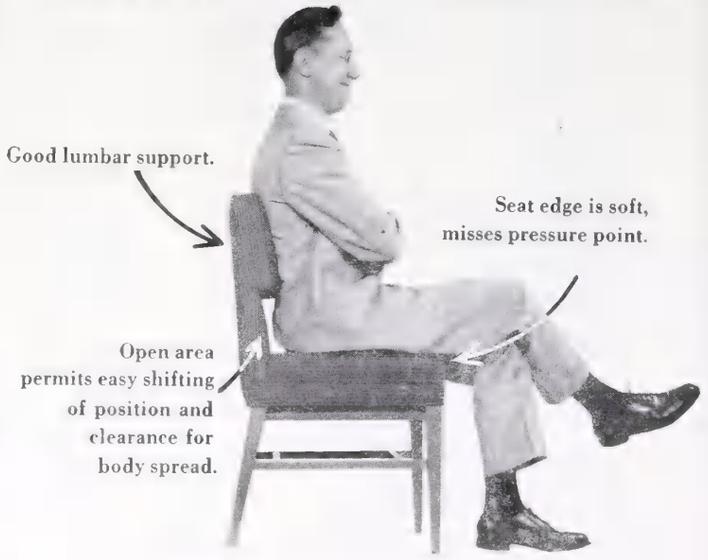
Sit-down chores in a kitchen are less fatiguing if the chair supports the back yet leaves the arms free and at the same level as the work surface. A springy chair helps circulation.

know your dress size, hip measurement, glove size, hat size, etc. For instance, you should know the length of your legs from knee to floor so you can tell right away whether a 17-inch-high chair is right for you or not.



That checklist of nine things should help you in selecting chairs for yourself or your family. I recognize, of course, that different kinds of chairs are needed for different activities. A dining-room chair hardly needs a head rest!

But you don't have to do anything outlandish to have correct furniture. It can be styled in any way you like. Actually our ancestors in the early days of the United States had some chairs more comfortable than most of ours. Long ago they discovered that one of the best chairs in the world is the now old-fashioned cane-seated porch rocker with high back.

This rocker has low enough arm rests. It gives support to the upper shoulders and neck. It has a firm flat back that can be padded to fit the lumbar region by adding a small cushion. The rocker can be tilted back to any degree desired so as to insure sufficient "slope." The gentle motion of the rocking is good because it favors circulation by alternately relaxing and contracting the muscles and so keeps them from getting stiff. And the chair has long rockers which make it difficult to tip over.

I remember the case of a wealthy New Yorker who lived in a 25-room house, filled with the most elegant furniture that money could buy. He suffered constantly from muscular backache. I visited his home and couldn't find one chair that was suitable for him. Then he bought a summer porch rocker which cost him all of $7, and he placed it in the drawing room. His wife thought it so ugly she hastily had it covered.

The next time I saw this man he told me he had bought two more of the porch rockers. "I have only one complaint," he said. "I never get a chance to sit in my rocker. Someone else is always in it!"

The old-fashioned upholstered rocker as a rule is a good chair. But speaking physiologically, not all rockers are well designed. The one with a scooped back and too-high arm rests violates several rules of sittability.

Oddly enough, another excellent chair is the dentist's! It has an adjustable headrest. It has just the right support for the lower back. It has armrests the right height and an adjustable foot rest. The seat itself is firm. It's no thing of beauty and most of us associate it in our minds with unpleasant moments of drilling, but structurally it is an almost ideal chair.

School seats and church pews are often horrible examples of poor seating. School seats are apt to be inflexible. Desk and seat are often fitted to the floor or are all in one piece, so there's no chance for adjustment. The backs are apt to be vertical without any slope. There's seldom enough variation in size to take care of all the different heights in the same class.

In fact, I believe that poorly designed and wrong-size school seats are a major cause of inattention and inability to concentrate. If the seat is uncomfortable, your child squirms; he's driven to squirm. And he is just too miserable to think. He's an illustration of the old Greek proverb:

"The mind can absorb no more than the seat can endure."

preheated serving dish surrounded by the artichoke hearts, asparagus and new potatoes.

Hare Simmered in Champagne

Rub a young hare with 1 tablespoon salt and ½ teaspoon pepper. Cover with thin slices of fat back of pork, tie lightly. Then tie the hare firmly into a round—the forelegs first, then the hind legs and finally the head to the hind quarters. Put ⅓ cup butter in large round Dutch oven with 2 chopped onions, 5 chopped shallots and 2 cloves crushed garlic with a bouquet of ½ bay leaf, a sprig of thyme and some parsley. As soon as the butter bubbles, place the hare in the Dutch oven, cover tightly, reduce heat and cook very slowly for 2 hours, turning.

Reduce by half over low flame 1 quart dry champagne. When reduced, set it on fire together with ½ cup very good cognac and pour over hare, allowing it to simmer 1 hour longer. Meanwhile, simmer 5 fine truffles in 1 cup champagne for 1 hour. Cut in slices and add to juice in Dutch oven. Place hare on preheated serving dish, remove strings. To contents of the pot from which all grease has been skimmed, add 6 tablespoons heavy cream. Heat thoroughly, but do not allow to boil. Strain over hare and serve at once. The hare may be surrounded by lightly toasted pieces of bread, with crusts removed or small crescents of puff pastry.

[If a whole young hare is not easily available, use instead, a package of Smorgon's quick-frozen cut-up rabbit. It is not necessary to thaw it; just put it into the pot with the butter, onions, shallots and herbs.—Ed.]

Kidneys in Champagne

Allow one pig's kidney per person. For 4 kidneys, chop ⅓ cup onion, 3 shallots and crush 1 clove garlic. Put aside 2 tablespoons very finely chopped parsley. Cut the kidneys in half lengthwise, remove all skin, fat and nerves. [If you buy quick-frozen kidneys it is all done for you.—Ed.]

Over high heat melt ½ cup butter. When it bubbles, add the chopped onions, shallots and garlic; then the kidneys. Turn with wooden or stainless steel or silver fork. When the kidneys are no longer red (after about 2 minutes), add 2 tablespoons flour. Turning over very high heat, cook 2 minutes and then add 1½ cups dry champagne. Continue cooking for 2 or 3 minutes. Pour into preheated serving dish and sprinkle the chopped parsley over the top. The kidneys should not cook more than 10 minutes. With deftness, 8 minutes should suffice.

If pigs' kidneys are not tempting, try veal kidneys. If all kidneys are anathema, chicken livers can be substituted successfully.

Shell Fish in Champagne Sauce

Use about equal quantities of lobster, crab and shrimps—say a 2 pound lobster [or quick-frozen lobster tails, and Wakefield's Alaska king crab legs—Ed.], and 1½ pounds shrimps. Make a court bouillon using 2 carrots, 2 onions, 1 bay leaf, sprig of thyme, several stalks of parsley, several whole black peppers and enough water to float the lobster. Cook a few minutes, add lobster and simmer 25 minutes or until done.

Allow lobster to cook in court bouillon. Prepare the crab in the same way. Boil shrimps in water just long enough to have them turn pink. Cut the lobster in half lengthwise, remove meat, crack the claws and remove meat. Put the meat aside. From the shell remove and discard sack. Scrape everything else from shell and put aside. Prepare crab in same manner. Shell shrimps and remove black vein from back. Cut the lobster and crab meat in neat slices and mix with shrimps. Strain through a sieve, or put into your blender everything that was scraped from the lobster and crab shells. Melt ⅓ cup butter in a saucepan over medium heat, add 1 finely chopped onion and 2 finely chopped shallots. Cook for 10 minutes but do not allow to brown. Add lobster, crab meat and shrimps and ½ teaspoon salt. To strained or blended scrapings of the shells add the yolks of 3 eggs and 1 tablespoon flour. Stir until perfectly smooth. Add 6 tablespoons heavy cream. Pour into saucepan 2 cups champagne, bring to boil; reduce heat and add scrapings, egg and cream mixture, and the crab, lobster slices and shrimps. Do not allow to boil but turn constantly in the same direction until sauce is hot and has thickened. Serve at once.

Sweetbread Salad

A very exotic dish that is always greeted with surprise. Soak a pair of sweetbreads in water for 1 hour. Rinse in fresh water. Place in saucepan, cover with water, add ½ tablespoon salt, 4 peppercorns and a bouquet of parsley, ½ bay leaf and a small sprig of thyme, a small onion, 1 carrot and 1 teaspoon lemon juice. Simmer covered for 30 minutes. Remove sweetbreads from saucepan, drain and wipe dry. As soon as they are cool enough to handle, remove skin, fat and tendons. Slice neatly in 6 fillets.

Peel a cucumber, slice and sprinkle salt fairly liberally over the slices. Blanch 3 firm tomatoes, remove skins and slice. Cut 3 nutmeg melons or small cantaloupes in half, remove seeds and fibers, cut in slices and remove rinds.

Boil for 12 minutes ½ pound sliced mushrooms in 1 cup water to which the juice of ½ lemon has been added. Place the sweetbreads on a bed of lettuce in the center of a flat dish. Arrange around them the sliced cucumbers which have been carefully wiped dry and free of salt, the tomatoes, mushrooms and sliced melons. Pour over 1½ cups chilled champagne.

Choucroute

This is a distinguished version of a common dish. Line the bottom of an enameled pot that has a tight-fitting cover with slices of fat back of pork. On this place a fresh pig's trotter (foot), ½ pound of pork rind with a half inch of lean pork. Add 1 pound uncooked sauerkraut, 1 pound breast of pork cut into 6 pieces. In a cheesecloth bag place ¼ cup juniper berries [Spice Islands puts them up in jars.—Ed.], 10 whole black peppers, 2 whole cloves, 1 bay leaf, and a sprig of thyme. Then add 2 chopped onions and 2 crushed cloves of garlic, 2 cups of good beef bouillon and 2 cups of champagne. Cover, bring to a boil and simmer for 5 hours. Be careful nothing sticks to the pot. Remove from heat and when quite cold, remove all fat. It is a good idea to let it stand overnight. After the fat, trotter, rind and the bag of spices have been removed, bring to a boil again and add 4 fresh pork chops and 4 smoked pork chops. Simmer for 1 hour; add 4 slices of ham from which the fat has been removed, 4 Frankfurt sausages and 4 Strasburg sausages and cook for 10 minutes. Serve very hot with:

Fluetters

Boil 2 pounds peeled potatoes cut in quarters in enough salted water to cover. Mash thoroughly. (Or use 2 packages heated Birds Eye quick-frozen mashed potatoes. —Ed.) Add 2 tablespoons flour, ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper, 2 tablespoons very finely chopped parsley, 1 clove crushed garlic and 2 whole eggs. Beat until smooth. Form into 10 or 12 balls and place on well-buttered fireproof earthenware dish. Paint with ⅓ cup melted butter and brown in oven for 20 minutes. This is an Alsatian way to prepare potatoes and consequently a fitting accompaniment to a dish of choucroute.

[Since many of the ingredients are not readily available outside of France, here are substitutes:

Use mildly-smoked bacon or salt pork instead of slices of fat back; well-drained canned sauerkraut instead of raw. If smoked pork chops are hard to find, use inch-thick slices of smoked shoulder or tenderloin.

Instead of Strasburg sausages, use Jones Farm sausage links. And if momentarily, you can't find a pig's trotter throw in an envelope of Knox unflavored gelatin to give a rich gelatinous quality to the broth.—Ed.]

Punch

This is an excellent punch served in California for festive occasions.

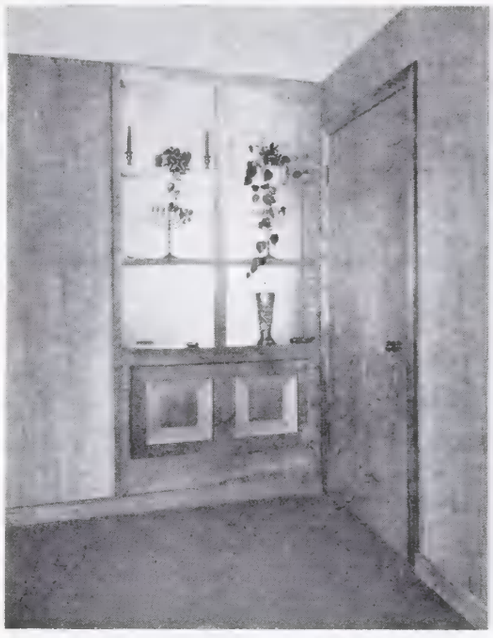
Boil 2 cups sugar with ¾ cup water for 5 minutes. Pour 1½ cups boiling water over two heaping teaspoons of green Chinese tea. Let stand 3 minutes, strain and put aside to cool. Slice a medium-size pineapple. Cut each slice into 8 pieces, remove rough center and eyes and put them into a saucepan with the scrapings from the shell. Cover with water, add 1 cup sugar and simmer for 20 minutes, strain through a fine sieve. Squeeze the juice from 5 lemons and 6 oranges. [You'll need about 1 cup lemon juice, 3 cups orange juice.—Ed.]

Combine pineapple slices with syrup and fruit juices. Add 1 bottle Tokay and 1 cup white curaçao or cointreau. Let stand for 4 hours. Then add 2 quarts dry champagne and 1 pint well-chosen strawberries. Pour over a block of ice into punch bowl. Makes 5 quarts about forty 4-ounce servings.

These are royal dishes. It was said long ago that good Californians, when they die, do not go to Heaven, but go to Paris. Are not these recipes part of the reward?

FOR SAFETY'S SAKE

Equip any closet that has high shelves with a folding stepstool kept there permanently. The impulsive alternatives, reaching or enlisting the services of a nearby chair, are potential accidents.



Equip each room in the house with a fire extinguisher. The kitchen above all needs this protection to control wastebasket and oven fires before they've a chance to flare into a dangerous blaze. These days, you can get small and very efficient fire extinguishers at reasonable prices, making adequate fire protection throughout a home feasible for everyone.

Make sure extension cords used to service electrical appliances are geared to the wattage pull of the equipment in question. For use with an electric iron, for instance, you're looking for trouble in using a conventional extension cord such as would be suitable for a lamp or other low-wattage device. An iron, because of its very high wattage pull, requires a heavy-duty extension cord known as a "heater cord."

Know the wattage rating of the electrical appliances you use. Armed with this information, you won't unwittingly overload the available wiring circuit. Appliances such as an iron or toaster, although small, impose a heavy wattage load. Wattage rating is always stamped on the base of an electrical appliance and is therefore a matter that can be easily checked.

Avail yourself of products that create a non-slip, non-skid surface on cellar or outdoor steps, on the floor of bathtubs or shower stalls. Bathroom safety measures such as tub seats and railings are worth looking into where invalids or elderly persons are concerned.

drinkable. Belgian drugstores are almost the same sort as we have at home. You can shop by phone and purchases are delivered to your hotel or your home.

Among the best buys in Belgium are its many types of handmade lace and its heavy crystal-ware from Val St. Lambert. Beautiful embossed shotguns, the best in the world, are another Belgian specialty. A trip through one of Brussels' shopping streets, like the Rue Neuve, or the Rue Haute, or fashionable Avenue Louise, will show you just what an international shopping paradise Belgium can be, with every kind of merchandise from junk iron to haute couture for your pleasure. Belgian antique shops are the never-ending delight of the amateur.

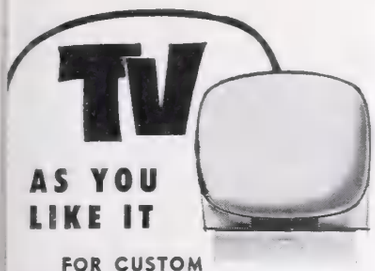
FOOD is one of the Number One reasons for going to Belgium. Belgians like not only lots of food, but the best there is. This little country is probably the gastronomic capital of Europe—the French notwithstanding. One proof is that Belgium, with a population of only 8½ million people, imports more French champagne and cognac than any other country in the world outside of Britain and the United States.

A meal (costing from about $1.50 to, say, $6 in the most posh places) in any good Belgian restaurant (and there are plenty of them) is sure to be superb. Belgian private wine cellars are probably the best stocked in the world, and it is not unusual for the head of the house to spend his vacation in the French wine country selecting the wines for his next year's table.

Belgian cooking sticks very closely to the French, but there are a few really local specialties that are excellent. One is Waterzooi, a sort of chicken stew with onions, leeks, thyme, celery, laurel, clove, yolks of eggs and, naturally, whipped cream. Their pastries outdo the French as complicated productions in calorie combinations.

Belgians are a very gadget-minded people, and are quick to adopt the most efficient method of doing things, or to improvise an efficient method of their own.

They were the first people in the world to have a regular helicopter passenger service, and the first to deliver mail to small towns throughout the country by helicopter. Even if you are an experienced world traveler, with thousands of hours of air travel behind you, the chances are you have never flown in a helicopter. Belgium gives you that opportunity with a service to nine different cities in four different countries.



Another Belgian transportation "first" is the rail link between Brussels airport and the center of town—a 20 minute train ride for about 25 cents. Belgian roads are good, and you can drive from one end of the country to the other in about 6 hours.

Accommodations are plentiful, which is a welcome change from other European countries. Hotels are good and not expensive.

Belgium has some of the most up-to-date building and construction ideas in Europe, existing side by side with some of the loveliest medieval architecture to be found in all Europe. Among Belgian construction formulas are many that are quite revolutionary. The new central railway station in Brussels, for instance, has no doors. In winter the interior of the building is heated by a blast of hot air forced into it from the entrance gates.

Like Americans, Belgians are not afraid to try the new and original. An example is the gracefully cantilevered circular staircase in the General Motors building in Antwerp, which has made other European builders sit up and take notice. Antwerp, by the way, is Europe's Number One port, and it claims to be—after London and New York—the world's third largest shipping center. American automobile manufacturers all have assembly plants there and ship completed cars to all parts of the Continent from the old, Flemish-gabled, quay-side warehouses of what is at the same time a city of great touristic interest, and one of the busiest towns in Europe.

IN SPITE of a reputation for gaiety that even France cannot beat, Belgian people are hardworking and serious, and from the point of view of quantity, if not of quality, they have done one of the best jobs of reconstruction in Europe since the war. Unfortunately, most of it is coldly "modern"—uninspired, heavy and completely lacking in the artistic charm of the old Flemish architecture that abounds in some parts of the country. To walk into some of the newly-built areas gives you the impression of coming into a gigantic bathroom.

Luckily Belgium is not all garish modernity, and if you want to turn the clock back to the Middle Ages, nothing is simpler than to take the short, hour-and-a-half trip by car or train from Brussels to Bruges, the Venice of Northern Europe. There, in red brick surroundings that have hardly changed since Rubens' day, you can imagine yourself an old Flemish burgher with the greatest of ease. Medieval buildings are wonderfully set off by the town's numerous canals, and at night the architectural details of the important ones are sharply accented by floodlights. A trip by boat through the canals at night is a romantic visual orgy. In the spring comes the famous procession of the Holy Blood, when the city's most sacred relic is carried through Bruges' streets by the faithful, decked out in old-time costumes. In torchlight, the solemn religious ceremonies connected with the relic make a very moving sight, and bring the Middle Ages vividly to life. (Don't miss the Memling Museum in Bruges.)

NOT FAR from Bruges is another fine medieval city, Ghent, with its fortress castle, its Renaissance-Gothic Town Hall and its cathedral. In the cathedral hangs one of the Van Eyck brothers' most celebrated masterpieces, the painting of the Mystic Lamb. Ghent has managed to survive, as Bruges has not, as a modern city in addition to being a museum piece. It is one of the most important inland ports for barge traffic in the country. HOUSE BEAUTIFUL readers must not miss the Musée d'Anciens Mobiliers in Ghent.

If you would like to see in tangible stone and mortar the kind of castle you used to see illustrated in fairy tale books, you should take a quick side trip to Beersel, near Brussels. There, after a gastronomic treat in the one and only, and excellent, restaurant of the place, you will find a tiny gem of a chateau, complete with moat, dungeon and all the fixings. In summer a Belgian company puts on such plays as Othello, or the story of Tyl Eulenspiegel, in the castle courtyard in the open air. Even if you get rained on, which is entirely possible, the setting is one you will not forget.

Brussels, as one bright young American blonde burbled, is the "jazziest European city I've seen." For gaiety and fun only Paris can compete with it. There are several big, brassy night spots and one or two of the best bands on the Continent play at such intimate boites as the Nouvelle Équipe. Brussels' Place Broukère at night is like a small Times Square with slightly more tasteful neon lighting ringed around with dancing and dining places. Some of its best restaurants are on, or just a step away from, the Grande Place, a 17th-Century group of gilded Baroque buildings —one of the most theatrical sights in Europe at night.

Anyone interested in architecture will be fascinated by La Grande Place. For it is all of one piece, design-wise. Yet it shows how much unity can be achieved in city planning even though six centuries pass during the time of the building. Built around a small open square are the gilded façades of old 17th-Century Corporation Houses in a Brabantine Baroque style. Among them stands the Town Hall, partly built in 1102 and later finished in 1444. It's also amusing to ponder how glassy these Gothic and Baroque buildings were, so long ago. We think the 20th Century invented the extensive use of glass. La Grande Place sets you right.

Much of Belgium's gaiety is concentrated along its short, 35-mile coastline on the North Sea. In Ostende there is probably the most up-to-date and luxurious playhouse in the world, the new Casino—one of seven dotted around Belgium—with gambling tables, night clubs, exhibition rooms, theaters, restaurants and bars all under one air-conditioned roof. Ostende used to be the play-spot of kings and queens, but today's Belgian bigshot goes to Knokke where, alongside a Casino that offers such attractions as Maurice Chevalier, Yma Sumac or Benny Goodman, there is the tiny La Réserve hotel whose 31 rooms are among the fanciest you will ever find anywhere. Farther south, near the world's original mineral springs watering place, Spa, is one of the sweetest automobile race courses in Europe. Francochamps is well worth a visit, even if you are not a hot-rod enthusiast.

BELGIAN weather is notoriously wet, but the Belgians seem to have more convertibles and open cars per capita than people who live in sunnier climes, and they drive furiously around their little country with the tops down in all weathers. Up at the seaside, the more blustery it is the better they like it, for the North Sea air is thoroughly invigorating and is supposed to be full of iron.

Belgium is a land of paradoxes. It is a farming country that has been heavily industrialized. It is a democracy with a Socialist government, ruled by a solemn boy king. Sophisticatedly European, its wealth depends largely on the fact that it owns a huge chunk of darkest Africa, 80 times as big as the homeland, where over half the free world's uranium is mined.

TRAVEL around Belgium is made more adventuresome by the fact that the country is divided into two completely different language groups. On one side of an imaginary line that splits Belgium as neatly as a cleaver cuts a pork chop, the people speak Flemish, a form of Dutch. Across the line, and sometimes literally across the street, the people speak French. This may bother the tourist, but it does not seem to bother most Belgians much, and the two groups get along with a minimum of friction. Sometimes they even make fun of this language difference as they do at the marionette shows in Liége and Brussels. Here Punch and Judy get into fearful altercations over language misunderstandings, to the delight of audiences of both sections. But English is pretty universally spoken and an American has no difficulty getting around anywhere.

Belgians are enthusiastic joiners. Not only do they form and join Rotary Clubs and Lions Clubs with the verve of American businessmen, they are also always in the forefront of international movements to unify Europe, to reduce trade barriers or to try to remake the world's political map. Paul Henri Spaak, the present foreign minister, was, with Winston Churchill, one of the prime movers in the idea of promoting a united Europe. Belgium, like the United States, has been in favor of the European Coal-Steel Community, the European Payments Union, the European Defense Community, NATO and, of course, it has actually put some of these ideas into practice, notably the famous internation Benelux arrangement whereby Belgium, Holland and Luxembourg form one unit with respect to their economic problems.

Belgians are a very open-handed, optimistic people—receptive, or acceuilliant, as the French will tell you in an astonished tone of voice. In this they are much like Americans, for it is easier to meet and become friendly with Belgians than it is with most other European nationals. Usually no European will use the familiar "thou" form of address unless he knows you intimately. In Belgium, even the store clerks will tutoie the customers on sight in a way that would be considered shocking anywhere else. Friends are easy to make and nice to know in Belgium, and this brings you to another paradox, for it might be thought they would be sad with their drizzling weather and their constant danger of being overrun in war time.

Ever since Caesar wrote that the Belgians were the bravest of his northern enemies, the Belgians have been involved in whatever war happened to be going on in Europe at the time. It is not that they are warlike, they are merely in the wrong place geographically. Perhaps because of this, they have developed a superb gun-making industry. Their Browning firearms are known the world over, and their new automatic rifle has been adopted as standard equipment for the NATO armies in the face of both American and British competition.

BELGIUM'S greatest artistic glory came in the days of the Van Eyck Brothers, Rubens and the Flemish School. But there have been some worthy successors more recently, including James Ensor and Constant Permeke. Belgium's best-known living artist is perhaps the dream-surrealist, Paul Delvaux, many of whose paintings hang in American galleries and homes. Charles Le Plas and René Magritte are also international names. Georges Grar, the sculptor whose style is reminiscent of Maillol, has done some fine, sturdy figures that decorate the otherwise prison-like façade of one of Brussels' new bank buildings. One of his husky nudes, which was intended as decoration for a bridge at Tournai, has shocked the local worthies, however, and now reposes under the very bridge it was bought to dominate, away from prudish eyes.

Different as Belgium is from the United States, it certainly encloses a great deal of sympathetic similarity in spirit. Independent, inquiring, restless, curious and not unwilling to try something new, the Belgians enjoy life to the full. Like Americans, they want to be among the modern progressive states in today's complicated world.

If only to meet these people, the trip is well worth making.

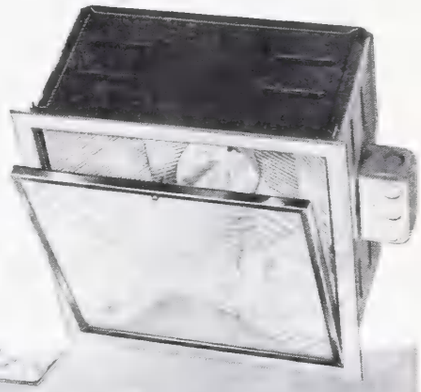
NEVER DATES YOUR ROOMS

Why You Should Plan "over-all" lighting in each room



Although it is generally used in kitchens and baths because these must be kept spotless, over-all lighting should be provided in all rooms. Think of the many occasions you have needed it in some room that didn't have it. Even though you use lamps for reading and for decorating effects insist on over-all lighting with Kirlin Recessed Fixtures in all rooms.

In your new home the fixtures will always be in style if you choose KIRLIN built-in lighting for all the rooms, halls and porches. Nothing dangles from the ceiling to catch the eye (or the dust) so you can change the decorating effect as many times as you wish over the years and the fixtures will never be obsolete.

Equally important—all your rooms will have adequate, diffused light such as you get from only the original KIRLIN built-in lighting fixtures which truly deliver more light from the same size bulbs. Installed costs are less too—which is why your architect and contractor will recommend Kirlin Recessed Lighting—if you ask them.

SIMPLE MEALS

tomorrow the simple but perfect repast that will permit him to enjoy his food and get on good terms with his liver again.

The simple, epicurean meal must be an accurate reflection of your most elaborate fare and just as carefully, in fact more carefully, prepared. It should, in fact, have everything your best meals have, except complexity, and since the framework is spare, the quality of the ingredients and cooking must be beyond reproach.

In a meal of this sort, since it cannot include the more complicated sauces and garnishes, there is an opportunity to display the most delicate cooking without any danger of encountering competition among the courses. Competition can be a real hazard, if one is not careful. (What a catastrophe it is when the first course, even if by its excellence, overshadows the slightly less excellent main dish which should be the peak of the meal!) The role of the first course, whether a single dish or a series of hors d'oeuvres, should be an awakening of the appetite, a delicious preparation of the palate for the main dish.

THE word simple, in the sense I use it here, has nothing to do with the economical—economy and good eating, rarely go together. I realize, of course, that there are wonderful foodstuffs, available at certain times of the year at low cost, which can be frozen and eaten the year round. But this does not alter the fact that the first sweet corn is a marvelous thing, and, after all, while corn in winter is fine, we are not trying to dispose of the seasons. We know, for instance, that champagne undergoes a second fermentation the spring after it is bottled, and we should hate to think that a human being has less rapport with nature than a bottle of wine.

All of this is particularly pertinent to people who, for one reason or another, are together a great deal. Food inevitably has its part. There are exchanges of hospitality. But there is a danger in these exchanges, the danger of competition, and it rarely moves in the direction of finesse. If it did, everyone would gain, but I am obliged to say that what generally occurs is a certain grossness that seems to be contagious and is somehow related to ostentation, not to be confused with abundance. True abundance is wonderfully and characteristically American. I feel, for instance, that if you have six guests, you must, at a minimum, have enough food for eight, but this should not affect its quality.

THE indigestible results of misguided competition were brought home to me rather sharply not very long ago. I had been working with a French poet on a ballet, and we had been having the usual exchange of dinners and suppers. In no time the exchange developed into a fairly sharp competition between French and American hospitality.

We had been serving, in addition to a large variety of invented or modified dishes which we called American since we, Americans, had made them, simple dishes such as barbecued spareribs. (You can buy superb ribs in France, but the French usually boil them with cabbage and potatoes.) We had hot rolls made from a packaged mix; tinned sweet potatoes, frozen lima beans and, what was most successful, gingerbread, made without any additions from another packaged mix and served with a little whipped cream. On tasting the gingerbread, the poet, not knowing it was an American mix, asked for the recipe.

When their turn to serve dinner came up, his wife, feeling that under no circumstances could they go down in a culinary defeat, went all out and produced what was probably the worst meal I have ever eaten. It began with beignets of strong sausage (a sausage covered with dough and cooked in deep fat) with a red sauce that I silently christened "heartburn on the hoof." This was followed by what I believe was a loin of pork, also with a sauce, although this one contained cream (at this point, I was eating out of sheer politeness).

The next course was a "plastic" passed off as a cheese and we ended with a sort of fruit pudding that had been forced to absorb so much sugar that there emanated from it a real feeling of danger. All of this was complicated and clearly required much preparation, but the result was that my wife, a woman not at all given to fainting, collapsed and had to be driven home. It was gratifying to know that they realized what it was all about. They said as much. But it should not have been necessary to provide such drastic proof.

James Joyce, when in Paris, used to meet his friends for dinner at Fouquet's on the Champs Elysées and, carrying the simple meal principle a bit far, fixed the following menu which they ate every night: Marennes oysters, chicken, wild mushrooms or asparagus, fruit salad or ice cream. This seems too rigid for me, but it is a perfectly balanced and perfectly interesting meal.

HERE, I should like to say a little more about my French friend, who served me the memorable, simple meal mentioned at the beginning of this article. I was fortunate to have had him as my mentor on food when I began my stay in France.

He was the president of a great Parisian club and had been everything from a gentleman jockey to a diplomat, even in his youth. Unlike most Frenchmen, he had traveled much, and consequently had an unusually tolerant philosophy. I remember that when I asked him if his position entailed a lot of work, he replied, "I have merely to visit the President of the Republic once a year to invite him to a certain function." This understatement was characteristic of him.

He was a true gourmet and taught me his grading of food, which began with "First Class" and went on to "Excellent" and "Very Good." I don't recall anything less than "Very Good," but when he said, "Very Good," I knew it was not much.

Our lunches invariably began with Belon oysters (we preferred them to all others in France) accompanied by dark bread, butter, lemon and a chilled wine, either a Sancerre or a Merseult. For the next course we often walked to another restaurant, known, perhaps, for its steak or leg of lamb. Whatever we had, it was always good, always simple, but never commonplace.

There was only one subject on which he was inflexible, and that was the choice of cheese. He was very fond of Pont l'Eveque, nutty tasting and slightly stronger than Camembert. If the establishment had one in just the right state, he would order it. Determining just the right state involved examining it, prodding it with the cheese knife, turning it over, and then, when the decision, if favorable, was made, it was with a certain air of resignation that I believe meant to say, "One can never be really certain."

The dessert was usually an éclair or some ice cream. The best of its kind. He never took coffee or a liqueur. Although he knew enough about food and wine to fill several books, his attitude toward the complicated in cooking was not favorable. In fact, one day at lunch at our apartment, when one of the guests began extolling a certain involved method of steaming a chicken over white wine, he was unable to refrain from commenting, "I prefer the wine on the table."

The following menus are examples of "A Simple Meal for a Gourmet." There is one for each season, and one that can be served at any time of the year.

Menu I—Spring

Italian Salami
Young Radishes Green Onions
Tiny Carrots
Pork Sausage in Sherry Sauce
Mashed Sweet Potatoes
Young Asparagus
Canadian Oka Cheese
Red Burgundy
Strawberries dipped in Red Wine
Coffee and Cognac

Italian Salami

Place very finely sliced Italian salami around the edge of a platter. (Noack's canned sliced salami is excellent.)

Arrange the cleaned vegetables (radishes, green onions, tiny whole carrots) in alternating circles, working toward the center. Leave room in the center for a bunch of parsley or water cress. In cleaning the vegetables, a bit of the green stem should be left to facilitate picking them up. The French eat crudités, as they call these raw vegetables, by picking up a bit of butter with the tip of the knife and drawing it through the top of the radish, onion or carrot. This leaves the butter nicely placed to pick up a little salt, which completes it. Crisp French or Italian bread accompanies this. With red wine to wash it down, it makes a very satisfactory hors d'oeuvre, particularly when the vegetables are fresh and young.

Pork Sausage with Sherry Sauce

Traditionally, in France, pork sausages are cooked with white wine, which is understandable, when the sausages are made of pork sausage meat—in other words, odds and ends of what is often dubious pork, "other ingredients," and spices. The wine, as in a marinade for game, acts as a moderator of flavors.

While it is possible to find sausages in France that taste of good pork, the pork sausage in America has attained autonomy—it does not taste like pork, it tastes like a sausage.

The role of the spices in these sausages has always seemed purely defensive to me and, while I understand that the spiced sausage has come down to us through tradition, from the days when there was no refrigeration, I do not see any reason for perpetuating it. There is as much sense in buying a spiced sausage as there would be in asking for a spiced hamburger. If anyone desires spices, let him add them to the meat or to the sauce. A hamburger is as good as the meat it contains and I believe this holds true for pork sausage. Spice Islands Company puts up an admirable sausage spicing.

If you wish to make your own pork sausage, grind pork shoulder with its fat or use a mixture of filet and shoulder, in the proportions of one third filet to two thirds shoulder. Grind it very fine, add salt and pepper and one beaten egg per pound of meat. A teaspoon of good cognac added to a pound of the mixture improves the flavor. It is possible to buy the skins to make sausages of this mixture, but I feel that the pork itself is most important here, and that cooking it in patties does just as well.

I first made this dish in Catalonia, where pork sausages are made of the meat of suckling pigs, and there is no confusion by way of spices. And since we were in Spain I had some fine old Spanish sherry on hand. When you make this dish, use the best sherry available.

To cook the sausages or patties, brown them well and when done remove most of the fat from the pan. (Swift's quick-frozen Brown 'n Serve sausages are fine, not too spicy and very fresh-tasting. They need no precooking, merely browning—Ed.) Set sausages aside, then add sufficient sherry to loosen the brown bits that remain encrusted in the pan. Stir and scrape very rapidly, over a fairly high heat. This picks up the fond or bottom and most of the alcohol evaporates, leaving a delicious essence that has something of the flavor of hazel-nuts—a taste I like. Pour this sauce over the sausages and serve with browned, mashed, sweet potatoes or Southern yams into which has been incorporated a considerable quantity of fresh butter.

Asparagus tips go well with this and should be flavored simply with salt, pepper, lemon juice and butter.

A not too dry white wine, very cold, should accompany this. A Bordeaux of the Graves type is just right.

Strawberries Dipped in Red Wine

This is a way of eating that must be of provincial origin, but some Parisians like it. The berries are fresh and unhulled and each guest is provided with a glass of cold water, a saucer of fine granulated sugar and half a glass of red wine. The Burgundy with which the cheese was eaten is perfect. Pick up a berry by the stem, stir it in the water to clean it, then in the wine and lastly, dip it in the sugar. Pop it into your mouth and withdraw the stem with your fingers. The flavor is enhanced (the wine does it) and somehow you seem very close to the berry.

Clean peppers by cutting around the stem, leaving just a bit of the concave part. Carefully remove the seeds and filaments with a knife without cutting through the peppers. If this occurs you must hold them together with toothpicks.

Clean the zucchini by cutting off each end and scraping them. Scrape until the darkest part of the skin is off. They should be a light green and not white. Scoop out the interior with an apple corer but do not take out too much as it will weaken the shell.

Sauté onion and garlic, finely chopped, in three tablespoons of olive oil until transparent but not brown. Add the ground meat, if raw. (If you are using cooked meat, follow the recipe, but add the meat when the stuffing mixture is ready.) Peel the eggplant and chop very fine with the interior of the zucchini. Add salt and pepper and cook until nearly done. Mix in rice.

Separate the mixture into two parts taking just enough to fill the zucchini and place it on a dish. The peppers require much more stuffing than the squash. Add the basil to the pepper stuffing and the tarragon to the zucchini stuffing. Fill the vegetables loosely and place them in an oven-proof earthenware dish. Pour over them a tomato sauce made of canned tomatoes (Hunt's Italian-style peeled tomatoes are excellent for this or you may use Hunt's canned tomato sauce), some chicken or beef stock quite reduced and the chili peppers. The sauce should not be too thick.

If you do not like piquant food use one chili pepper, but the zucchini are bland and require a lift. Add about three tablespoons of olive oil to this sauce and simmer for about 15 minutes with a bouquet garni composed of a bay leaf, a branch of celery, a sprig of thyme and about a tablespoon of chopped fresh fennel tops or half a teaspoon of powdered fennel. Put a clove of garlic through the garlic press and add to the sauce. When done, remove the bouquet garni and pour over the stuffed vegetables. Cook in a moderate oven 350° F. until tender (about 20 minutes) turning them at least once.

These are good hot or cold but for summer they are better cold.

Grilled Lamb Kidneys

Have your butcher prepare kidneys; allow two or three per guest. They should be opened into two halves but not separated. A toothpick or a small silver brochette must be used to hold them open. Brush them with melted butter, dust with salt and pepper and grill over or under a hot fire until they are crisply brown on the outside but rare inside (cook for about five minutes).

To serve, place the kidneys on a platter with a bit of butter maître d'hotel on each half. Make this sauce by mashing four tablespoons of butter with a teaspoon of very finely chopped parsley, salt, pepper and a few drops of lemon juice. Arrange the cress and potatoes around the kidneys in an attractive manner and serve. (Excellent canned shoe string potatoes are O & C Brand. This combination of grilled meat, potatoes and cress is called vert pré which means green meadow and is highly attractive because of the colors of the ingredients.

Salad of Romaine Lettuce

This is a crisp green and requires a slightly more pungent sauce than lettuce. For one medium head of romaine make a sauce of 6 tablespoons of olive oil, one-half teaspoon of Dijon mustard or a good pinch of Colman's dry mustard, 1¼ tablespoons of lemon juice, 1 teaspoon of powdered sweet Spanish pepper or paprika and salt and pepper. Mix well and chill. At the last moment pour over the romaine which should be served in a large bowl and mixed very well.

Raspberry Bavarois

This is a very simple but satisfactory dessert that pleases as much by its appearance as by its taste. It can be made with a variety of fruits such as strawberries, peaches or pineapple, but its chief quality is lightness.

Put through a sieve 1 cup fresh raspberries. (Or 1 package Birds Eye quick-frozen sweetened raspberries and no sugar.—Ed.) Add ¾ cup sugar, mix until dissolved and add the juice of half a lemon. Melt in a double boiler one envelope Knox gelatine mixed with four tablespoons of water. Add the raspberry mixture and put it in a cool place or chill over chipped ice.

The latter is the best procedure, but it must be stirred constantly to prevent hard bits forming. When it begins to thicken fold in 1¼ cups of cream which has been stiffly whipped. Prepare the mold (it can be a fairly ornate one) by brushing it inside with almond or peanut oil. Pour in the mixture and put it in the refrigerator until well set.

To remove it from the mold dip a knife in warm water and loosen the sides. Then put the mold in warm water for an instant and place a plate over the top. Turn over mold and plate and allow the varois to drop to the plate by elf. Fill the center with whipped eam and place a few candied vio- s or candied rose leaves on top the cream. A few very fine rasp- rries may also be used instead the candied flowers.

Grilled Shrimp with Herbs

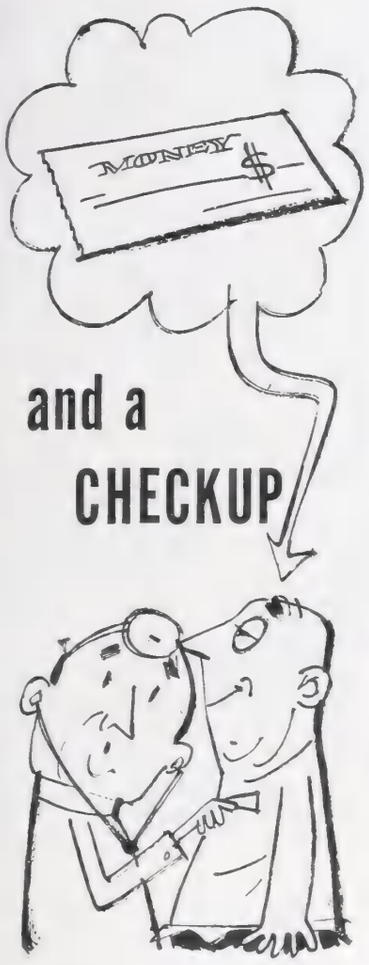
Place de-veined fresh-cooked or quick-frozen shrimp in a marinade of oil, lemon, thyme, rosemary and oregano, using one part lemon juice to four parts olive oil. A teaspoon of each herb is required for a pound of shrimp. Allow to marinate in a cool place for an hour or longer. It is not necessary to cover the shrimp, but turn or mix them from time to time. Grill, over, under or in front of a not too hot fire, basting with the marinade from time to time. This may be eaten with Saffron Rice.

Saffron Rice

Sauté an onion in 2 tablespoons of olive oil, add 2 chopped tomatoes that have been peeled and seeded, with one green pepper chopped. Add a teaspoon of powdered saffron and simmer 15 minutes. Prepare a package of pre-cooked Minute Rice and set in a warm place. Add a cup of chicken or fish stock to the sauce, cook for 5 more minutes and pour over the rice and shrimp. Decorate with slices of lemon.



Dry white wine goes well with this course.

Fried Chicken

Put 4 tablespoons of olive oil into a large, deep-sided frying pan. Another oil may be used if preferred, but olive oil, if of the finest quality, (the best comes from the region around Nice) gives a certain unctuousness to the sauce without a strong flavor, and it is infinitely superior to any animal fat for health and flavor. Add from 1 to 3 cloves of garlic chopped very fine. Add chicken and brown very carefully on all sides. Cover and reduce the flame. When done remove chicken and put on a warm platter. Make sauce by pouring into the pan a glass of good dry vermouth and some salt and pepper. Turn up the flame and allow to reduce for about half a minute. Hold a small, fine sieve over the chicken and pour the sauce through it, directly on the chicken.

free advice, literature and an air-conditioned time out for resting.

Choo choo charge account

Our friends and relatives are constantly reporting to us on the wonders and luxuries of present-day railroading—as if we didn't know! Cars are crystal-domed, air-conditioned, equipped with telephones and living room furniture, they have upstairs and down-stairs dining rooms, and decorator-designed rooms for private dinner parties. On the side of economy, they've been transporting mama, papa and children at specially reduced family rates during certain days of the week, and the savings and comfort of tourist coach travel are well known. Now an impressive group of 40 or so American railroads lets you enjoy the convenience of charging not only your railroad and Pullman fares, but your meals in diners and club cars and your baggage fees as well. It's all handily done by the issuance of a Rail Travel Card, for which business firms or individuals establish credit. You just show your card and eliminate all sorts of ticket-buying bother, as for instance the need of ready cash for an emergency trip. Or you may order tickets by phone and have them picked up by a messenger. You get your travel bill monthly, as uncomplicated as your milk bill. One credit card is good on all railroads involved in this plan. For more about this, write Rail Travel Credit Agency, Union Station, Chicago 6, Illinois.

So what else is new?

Two travelers we know, one fresh from Japan, the other newly arrived from Istanbul, met us in New York. "What's new and exotic in the world?" we asked. Almost like a duet they answered, "Irish coffee—the most wonderful stuff you ever drank!" One had sampled it first in Malibu Beach where it's having a big vogue with California hostesses. The other had tasted it at the Shannon Airport where, like the famous Irish oatmeal and bacon served in the restaurant there, it has come to be a specialty of the house. Investigation proves this confection to be a paradisiacal brew of strong coffee, Irish whiskey and whipped cream, enough to make you forget you ever left home let alone where you've been.

For the asking

Those famous last words of travelers, "How much is it in my money?" are easily answered by Pan American World Airways' new little currency converter. It's slim enough to slip into a wallet or the mirror pocket of a lady's handbag, but at one quick glance it gives you the money values of 20 countries of Europe and the Near East, all at current 1955 rates of exchange. Also provides a quick rundown on what you may or may not bring in or out of these countries, plus a salutary briefing on weights, measures, and Centigrade versus Fahrenheit temperatures. Yours with Pan Am's compliments. Address: Travel Department, House Beautiful, 572 Madison Avenue, New York 22, New York.

To Hawaii

Matson's "Lurline" will make two 14-day, all-expense holiday cruises this season, one to celebrate Thanksgiving, the other to fête Christmas and the New Year. Besides a stopover in luxurious hotels in Honolulu on the island of Oahu, they'll both put in a full day at Hilo, on the flowery, volcanic island of Hawaii. Thanksgiving cruise sails from San Francisco on November 18, returns to Los Angeles on December 1 and to San Francisco on December 2. The Holiday cruise leaves San Francisco on December 21 and Los Angeles on December 22, arrives back in Los Angeles on Janu-

To the Mediterranean

American Export's "Constitution" waves good-bye to New York on February 2 for 58 days of leisure cruising in the sun-splashed blue Mediterranean, the Aegean, the Bosphorus, and the Dardanelles. It will be stopping at 20 ports in 13 different countries, each one so entrancing we'd be hard put to guess which is likely to be the high spot of the trip. For instance, Teneriffe in the Canaries, Madeira, Casablanca, Gibraltar, Algiers, Naples, Malta, Alexandria, Beirut, Haifa, Istanbul, Piraeus, Dubrovnik (Jugoslavia), Venice, Messina, Naples, Genoa, Cannes, Palma de Majorca, Barcelona, Gibraltar and Lisbon. Minimum price is $1575.

To the Orient

American President Lines are running four rather breath-taking 6-week cruises this fall, all sailing from San Francisco and making stops in Hawaii, Japan, the Philippines, and Hong Kong, at a minimum fare of $1278. Schedule runs like this:

October 10, "President Wilson" leaves San Francisco, stops next day at Los Angeles, heads for the festive autumn leaf and chrysanthemum season in Japan, and arrives in Hawaii for Aloha Week.

October 31, "President Cleveland" leaves San Francisco, ready to celebrate Thanksgiving at sea and to give passengers opportunity to do their Christmas shopping in the fabulous free port of Hong Kong.

November 25, "President Wilson" leaves San Francisco for Christmas and New Year's en route on what is known as a Family Plan Cruise. Head of the house pays full fare while wife and youngsters pay half-rate for the full round of the 15,000 mile itinerary.

December 14, "President Cleveland" sails from San Francisco and on December 16 from Los Angeles for Christmas and New Year's in oriental waters, and at considerable reduction in rates.

Write: American President Lines, 29 Broadway, New York 6.

Around the World

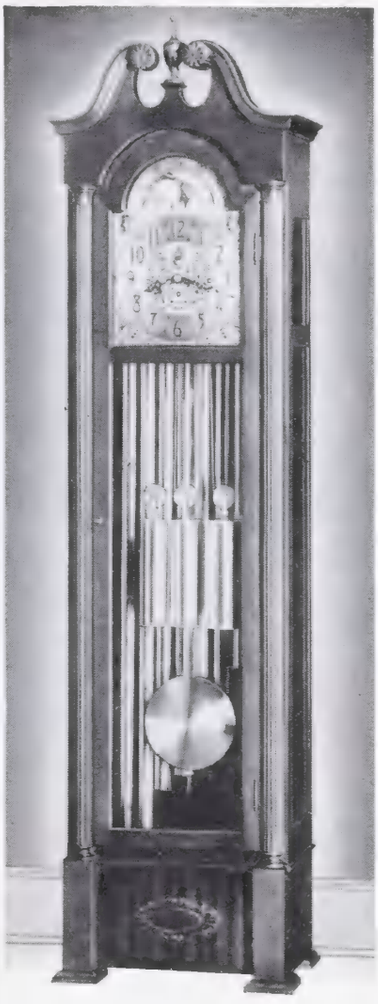
American President Lines' "President Wilson" will leave San Francisco on January 8 for one of this line's famous globe-circling junkets, this one lasting 115 days, stopping at Hawaii, Japan, Hong Kong, Kowloon, Malaya, Thailand, India, Beirut, Egypt, Italy, Southern France, the French and Italian Rivieras, Spain and New York. It will be under the direction of two seasoned travelers, wise in manners, ways, customs and shopping techniques the world over. The fare for this dream cruise starts at $6625. Write: American President Lines, 29 Broadway, New York 6.

Before your cruise

As a preamble to insure enjoyment of your cruise, give a few thoughts to the following:

Personal musts, like your vitamins, prescription pills, extra eyeglasses, cosmetics, your brand of cigarettes, which may or may not be replaceable once you leave home.

Travelers' checks, the only safe and really convenient way of carrying spending money. They cost 75¢ per $100 worth and couldn't be a better bargain.



Insurance covering your personal belongings. Not that you need anticipate the worst. But the minute cost of baggage insurance—about $4 for $500 for 21 days—makes it a real investment in peace of mind.

Your camera. Is it ready? Take plenty of film, especially color, which may not be easy to get where you're going. Run through a test roll, just to make sure of mechanical perfection, while you're still within reach of a repair shop.

Lists—a shopping list, which includes sizes, favorite colors, special yens of your friends, and all weddings, birthdays, and anniversaries in the foreseeable future, and a list of domestic dimensions in case you see something you want for your home, and a post-card list, so you won't forget the address of the very friend who will feel most crushed if a card is not forthcoming.

A packing plan that lets you pack all dutiable purchases together. Not only is this the fastest way through Customs, it also facilitates a final check against your sales slips so you can know that what you put down on your declaration form is accurate and non-controversial.

Be sure to let us know if you change your address.

Heirloom of the FUTURE!

The rich, distinguished beauty of a Herschede floor clock will give a lifetime of quiet pleasure to you and your family, while it marks the hours and minutes of your days with unerring accuracy.

More, its enduring elegance, its remarkably long-lived movement, make it a treasured heirloom that will just as gracefully and faithfully mark the passing hours for your grandchildren—and their children. It is a proud possession that you know will be admired and cherished by the generations to come.

MODEL 217, Colonial style, cased in Honduras mahogany. 80" high, 20½" wide. Eight-day, key-wound, weight-driven movement. Available with Westminster chimes alone, or with three chime melodies — Westminster, Canterbury and Whittington.

Garden Fences to Build

OAKLAND BUSINESSMEN'S GARDEN CLUB FOR OAKLAND GARDEN SHOW

This open-grid fence provides little obstruction to welcome breezes. Its single thickness construction is practical even in cold climates because (1) the curved form is inherently stable bracing itself, (2) reinforcing rods tie bricks together, (3) bricks are mortared at each contact point, (4) continuous cap adds greatly to over-all solidarity, (5) fence rests on a continuous footing deep enough to get below frost line. If long fence is needed, it could become a serpentine wall (losing none of the strength advantages of the strong curve).

PHOTOGRAPH BY PHIL FEIN

Board fences don't have to be "plain." Here's one appropriate treatment—1" x 2" spacers to create a third dimension and thus a whole new shadow pattern. If fence were used to terminate an important view, the spacers (or alternate ones, depending upon scale needed) could be painted to contrast with body of fence. To keep paint from peeling, thoroughly coat ends of each piece of lumber before nailing it into place. Paint both sides of fence to seal moisture out. Or use one of the newer outdoor stains instead, now available in brighter colors.

GETTING MARRIED AGAIN?

Most of us get married again every time we go to a wedding—or even hear about one. No matter whether it's in the family or out.

If you remember your own wedding, you had lots of questions—and you got as many answers as you had advisers. It was all pretty confusing. No need for this to happen to the girl you know who's getting married.

You can dispel most of the confusion by giving her the most welcome present ever—a bookful of answers from the nation's leading bridal authority, House Beautiful's GUIDE FOR THE BRIDE. From it she can learn all the basic principles of what she needs to know to plan her wedding, her home and her future.

Here's the kind of helpful information she can get from the Fall issue of GUIDE FOR THE BRIDE now on sale at newsstands.

first work in a series of small figure-8 patterns to bring the fine particles of the mix to the surface; then sweep around their bodies in wide arcs to level the whole. Caution: Be particularly careful not to overwork any areas during this operation. If any spot is too wet to finish, delay work until the area dries. Never sprinkle dry cement on it to absorb the water!

Step 6: Use the edger after floating. This will produce a hard, even corner that won't crumble when the form is removed.

Step 7: "Troweling" compacts the surface, resulting in a smooth, dense, durable finish. A 4" x 14" trowel is the best tool for most home projects.

Delay troweling until the concrete is hard enough so that no mortar adheres to your trowel. (You should hear a ringing sound from the blade.) Tilt the blade and exert heavy pressure. The harder the surface is troweled, the more lasting it will be, if concrete has set up sufficiently so excess particles will not rise to the surface.

NON-TROWELED FINISHES:

Smooth and polished or rough and grainy, either finish looks well as long as you are consistent. Varying textures indicate sloppy workmanship (unless they are controlled in definite patterns).

The amount of troweling determines the smoothness, so if you want a rougher surface for appearance or non-skid reasons, reduce or eliminate troweling. Paths, drives and terraces are often completed by floating only.

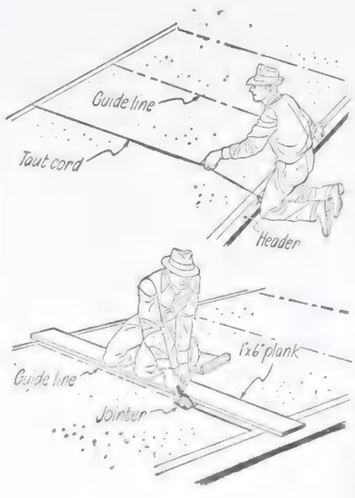
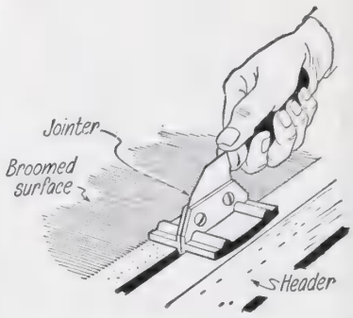
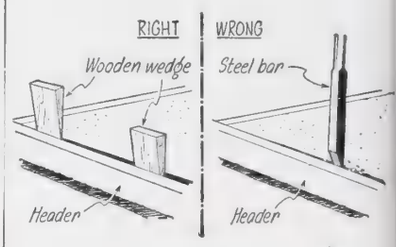
Or you can produce a scored surface by brooming after the first troweling. Do this by dragging a pushbroom of steel wire or coarse stiff bristles across the surface. You have to wait to do this until the concrete has almost set or it won't be stiff enough to retain scoring.



Brooming usually is done crosswise to the direction of the main traffic. When wooden divider strips cut an area into squares, an interesting pattern can be created by brooming alternate squares in opposite directions.



Brooming is easy to execute, results in a pleasant appearance and a safe surface, and is a recommended finish for beginners to try. (One drawback: brushing may produce a grooved surface that is difficult to clean.)



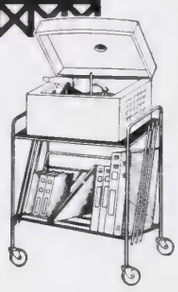
Jointers are tricky affairs to handle, but they can be used to groove lines in flat surfaces to create pattern. Do this after troweling. Stretch a cord and snap it against the moist concrete to leave a guide line.

Then put a 1" x 6" board down alongside the line to serve as a knee board and straight-edge for the jointer. Score the surface by drawing the jointer across it.

REMOVING FORMS: Forms can be removed after the second day, but unless they interfere with other operations, leave them in place until curing is complete.

Forms usually can be pulled away without damage to the concrete below. If wedging is necessary to pry them loose, use wooden wedges rather than metal bars which might harm the new concrete.

If further finishing is needed for surfaces exposed by the removal of forms, such as risers of steps, wet down these surfaces, then brush them with a mixture of portland cement and water (called "neat cement").



CURING: Inattention to curing is second only to overworking in causing trouble. Concrete shrinks and cracks unless cured slowly—and it can't cure unless it is kept moist.

Complete curing may take years (hydration resumes every time the concrete gets wet), but for practical purposes enough hydration takes place if the new concrete is kept moist for the first week. Ten days is better.

Rain is a hazard during the first 3-4 hours after finishing (pits the concrete); after this it is helpful. Muggy, cloudy weather is good; hot, windy weather is really dangerous.

Choose the curing method easiest for your conditions. Start 3 or 4 hours after completing the finishing.

Method 1: Build an earth dam around new concrete; flood the area. Leave it like this for 10 days.

Method 2: Keep the surface moist at all times by means of lawn sprinklers. This uses more water because of greater evaporation but is useful where damming is impractical. You can turn the sprinklers off at night if the weather is cool enough so that little drying occurs.

Method 3: Sprinkle the surface whenever it seems to be drying out. This saves water and requires no equipment beyond a hose or watering can, but it requires constant attention. You must prevent alternate cycles of drying and wetting or the surface will craze and crack.

PROTECTION: To protect concrete slabs after curing (where additional construction work must be done), cover with kraft paper, lapping the joints 6″ and holding it down with wood strips or with some masking tape.

COSTS OF EQUIPMENT AND MATERIALS: These are approximate prices for the most commonly used tools and materials:

Cement float, $1.
Cement finishing trowel, $4.
Cement edger, straight, $1.25.
Jointer, adjustable, $3.

Sculpture in Reproduction

Of all art reproductions, those of sculpture are probably the closest to the originals. When they are capably done, as here by Museum Pieces, Inc., which makes molds directly from the original pieces and casts them into a stone-like composition approximately five times harder than plaster, it is possible to achieve almost perfect imitation.

And when they are hand-finished, they are virtually identical in color, patina, texture and technique (even suggesting hand chiseling or modeling). Since they are made directly from the original work, they are, of course, identical in size, a most important quality, one that is rarely achieved in reproductions of paintings, for example.

Practically every leading museum in the world—the Louvre of Paris, the Uffizi of Florence, the Vatican of Rome, the Metropolitan of New York—has reproductions of sculpture as an educational part of its collection. (How would most Americans get any realistic idea of the "Venus de Milo," Michelangelo's "Slave" and other famous works of sculpture which are in Europe, if museums didn't exhibit full-size reproductions?)

There is only one cautionary note to add: Avoid buying a reproduction that is so popular you might see it in too many homes and thus find it growing dull in your own. In the field of oil painting this applies to reproductions like those of Van Gogh's "Sunflowers," Gainsborough's "Blue Boy" and others that have become clichés either of today or yesterday. The ones shown here from Avensberg Collection of pre-Columbian sculpture at the Philadelphia Museum of Art, admirably avoid the commonplace and the ordinary, and are small enough to be useful in many ways and places in the home.

the adventures of a home owner

BUYING STORMS and SCREENS

Would you ever guess that Harry is about to face a problem? Settled for the evening, he's a happy man. Then—he remembers!

"Migosh," says Harry, rushing to the window, "no storms and screens! A new house, and I've forgotten about the weather!"

"Quick," says Harry, "talk to me about storms and screens. What kind? How do I know what kind? Okay, I'll be right down."

"So," says Harry, to his dealer, "what should I get?" "Get self-storing steel combinations," says the salesman, "and here's why."

"Steel," says he, "is strongest. And, it lasts longest." "Hmm," says Harry, thinking about steel-strong bridges and steel-strong buildings, "that's right."

"Sure," says the salesman, "and steel costs less. Initial cost is low, and because steel storms never rot, warp, shrink or swell, upkeep is nil."

"What's more," says he, "changing from storms to screens is simple as opening a window. Your wife could do it." "My wife?" says Harry. "Sold!"

So—steel it was. And Harry is still admiring the sturdy good looks of his purchase. "I'll take steel," Harry says, "'cause steel can take it!"

STEEL IS STRONGER...
STEEL LASTS LONGER...
STEEL GUARDS BEST...
STEEL COSTS LESS!

LAUGHING HEAD FROM VERA CRUZ, presumably Late Period, is one of the few humorous figures in American antiquity. Warm and whimsical in brown clay, its crown headdress and single earring make it a provocative piece. Height: 8⅛" including black base; $15.

PERFORATED MASK from Guerrero, Mexico. Probably a work of the Late Period, this coarse sandstone mask is engagingly bold in its carved and perforated design. Metal loop in back simplifies hanging from a wall hook. Height: 8⅛"; $5.50.

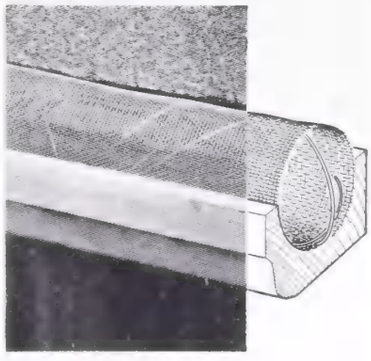
Keep leaves out of gutters

Leaf clogging takes two forms: (1) in the gutters (2) in the spout.



When the gutters themselves clog, rainwater cannot run down the drain fast enough to prevent overflows. This results in staining the house paint below.

When leaves float along until they drop into the downspout, they gradually build up into a big plug that blocks off the water completely. Trouble here may be aggravated by the fine sand that slowly washes loose from a gravelled shingle roof. The end result, of course, is a complete breakdown of the gutter system, with the rainwater flooding over the edges of the gutter.

Clogged gutters also lead to several other troubles. Water-filled gutters offer mosquitoes a fine breeding place. House paint, in contact with water in gutters for days after each rain, gradually curls and flakes off. Then, too, ice forms in the winter. It often pushes up under the eaves, sometimes even up under the shingles. When the ice melts, water may find its way into the wall, even into the insulation below.

The solution to all this is to keep leaves from ever getting into the gutter. This isn't as difficult as is may seem: Slip a tubular screen into the gutter so leaves will bounce off it and sail right down to the ground instead of collecting in the gutter. You can buy a copper-screen version of this, called "Rain-L-Flow." It comes complete with an internal wire, as shown below, to keep the tube from collapsing.

STANLEY STUDIO

You will never have to clean the gutters or downspouts once you install a leaf guard like this. Guard is sold in 5' lengths which telescope together to make a unit of any length needed. It should fill gutter end to end, including area for the downspout opening.

A PAINTING for my MUSIC

Here is personal advice from a professional on the kind of painting for the music room

By GLORIA STROOCK

It is important to have one place in the home, however small that spot may be, where you can get away and reflect. Today more and more people are turning that "reflective room" into a music room. It may be a den, a corner of the living-room, the attic or a room that is devoted exclusively to making or listening to music.

Why not a painting for that music room? But what painting? This poses specific problems. What kind of art complements music? It is so much more a matter of taste than a matter of what is correct, that suggestions can only be personal. Still, I think that I can offer some advice, as I did to those who came to buy paintings at our Little Studio in New York. Just keep one thing in mind. I told them, before you start marrying paintings to music; remember, they will have to live with each other.

My specific advice generally depended on whether they preferred traditional, impressionist or abstract painting.

To those who prefer traditional painting, I say I should probably think first of the traditional violin still life (or any painting using musical instruments). Such a choice, however, I caution, would not be ideal. A perfectly drawn, detailed musical instrument, or for that matter a perfectly detailed painting of a dewy rose, might be a lifeless, instead of a living, subject in a room that is filled with music, where the imagination is waiting to soar. The rhythmic style of a Blake drawing, it seems to me, would be much better. The literal story-telling canvas, be it a Biblical story or a landscape or a still life, is perhaps too absorbing. Music should tell the story for us, or better still, allow us to be our own storyteller.

If I were a traditionalist and had unlimited means, I would choose the quiet feeling of a Corot instead of the hulking drama of a Goya, an El Greco rather than a Rembrandt, a Turner rather than a Guardi—not on merit, but because Corot, El Greco and Turner are looser and more flexible in color and drawing. They would complement the music and in no way compete with it. (I should apply the same principle of choice in selecting contemporary paintings done in the traditional manner.)

Those with impressionist taste in paintings have less of a problem, I think, because impressionist paintings do get away from literal themes and deal more with light and color. Think of the wonderful colors of Van Gogh's paintings; they would be ideal in music rooms.

The third major group of paintings—it is of course a loose way of grouping art by dividing in three—is the abstract. The importance of light and color continues, and the importance of line and design is re-emphasized in this new modern style. Here is where my own taste lies, and, if left to my own fun and funds, I would select a painting for my music room in a style somewhere between the impressionistic and the abstract.

When an abstractionist has painted the sea, for example, it is no longer the sea, the actual sea seen from where the artist stood. More than the sea at Dieppe or Antwerp, it is the sea of free imagination. It has no specific locale or shape. The definition is what you give it.

More than ever today paintings and music are evoking a response which is purely emotional. The abstract artist, in my opinion, helps us to do just that. We derive from his canvas an emotional response, which is what we get from listening to music.

SO WHEN you buy your painting for the music room, try to think of the music that you are buying it for. If your taste is varied, and you enjoy show tunes as well as opera, the wider should be the emotional range that you demand from your paintings.

It is in the choice of this painting that we can fully express our own taste and personality. Few of us—very few—may be able to spend a great deal of money acquiring masterpieces of painting from the larger galleries and important dealers throughout the country. This should not deter us, however: we can all have paintings.

It is a sad misconception that a good painting need be expensive. In New York or its vicinity, visit the spring and fall outdoor shows in Washington Square. Demand for low-priced paintings has become sufficiently large to enable a new type of gallery—the "Little Studio"—to spring up and flourish in many cities: New York, Beverly Hills, Chicago, Denver and Cincinnati, for example. If you find yourself on the Cape in Massachusetts during the summer, you can see the output of the artist who gets his inspiration from Provincetown. In quite a few cities, department stores offer paintings for sale—some very poor ones, but enough good ones to make browsing an adventure. You may be surprised to see how many cities without a "Fifty-seventh Street" cater to the growing demand for fine art in the home. And among them you'll find a painting for your music room.

Why October is

The safest time to use

By DR. JOSEPH E. HOWLAND

Fall is the best time of year to use weed killer chemicals. Most weeds grow until frost, but garden plants are fairly inactive then. This lets you use heavy doses of chemicals—insuring thorough weed killing while there is not much danger of permanent injury to nearby garden plants. Then since you won't be planting again until spring, there is time for natural breakdown of any weed killer that gets into the soil. Weedy brush killed chemically now will dry slowly. Be ready to burn in midwinter when burning is safest.

Fall is psychologically a good time for weed killing, too. Clean up the mess now and you start the year with fewer pests, have a better chance of staying ahead of the weeds. Fall is also the easiest time to spot intruders like poison ivy because then it's the prettiest, reddest fall color in sight.

Your lawn, too, profits greatly from a fall once-over with weed killer. Only crabgrass has stopped growing. (You might as well wait until spring for crabgrass, when the seeds start to sprout: then wipe out with three applications of PMA.) The non-grassy weeds should get a dose of 2,4-D at once, not later than October 10th if the nights are getting cool.

If your lawn is more weeds than grass—and this was a tough summer on lawns in many parts of the country—then you may need a real killer that "sterilizes" the soil and lets you start fresh. You have a choice of methods. None is exactly easy. All have some risk in them because you want to use enough chemicals to kill the toughest weeds but not enough so that the soil remains sterile too long.

Dowfume does a good job, but is somewhat of a nuisance to apply. (You have to cover the soil for 24 hours to allow the lethal gas to do its work.) It is usually safe to reseed the lawn 24 hours after removing the cover. Better wait a week if you are starting with sprigs instead of seeds.

Vapam seldom is available except on the west coast, where it is liked by lawn experts. It, too, is a liquid which vaporizes in the soil, so works best in loose, sandy soils.

For sun-baked clay soils maleic hydrazide sprays (1% strength) may be more effective. Even Bermuda grass succumbs to it. If you plow under the dead weeds and grass, experience has shown that it is safe to reseed the lawn a week later.

chemical weed killers

(Turn the page for information on the best time to seed your lawn.)

Rules You Can't Afford To Ignore

1. Use the correct chemical for the job.

2,4-D has done such a good job of killing broadleaf weeds in lawns that today the major lawn weeds are not dandelion and plantain but grassy types, like crabgrass and Bermuda grass; 2,4-D does not affect them. It is precisely because 2,4-D has no effect on grass that we are able to use it on lawns as a selective killer. Today, many users of 2,4-D conclude that "the chemical weed killers used to work but they aren't any good any more." Read the label on the killer you buy to be sure the chemical you plan to use will kill the weeds you want to eliminate. Be sure, also, to use it in the proper season.

2. Apply weed killers only on still days.

The spray or dust that "drifts" away on a windy day can damage or kill nearby plants in yours or the neighbor's yard. "Drift" can cause even mature trees to lose leaves. Suspect weed-killer injury if leaves on lower branches start to yellow and dry. There is no remedy for this, but prompt, generous feeding and watering will help the tree grow new leaves.

3. Hold spray nozzle close to the weeds.

This is especially important if the soil is baked dry; then all plant leaves are hungry for water and accidental wetting of desirable plants may be fatal. Spray nozzles that keep the spray in coarse droplets help prevent such accidents. Although you use more spray material, the safety afforded is worth extra cost. Commercial weed sprayers avoid accidents by enclosing spray nozzles within a hood that confines the droplets long enough for them to settle on the leaves of the weeds to be killed.

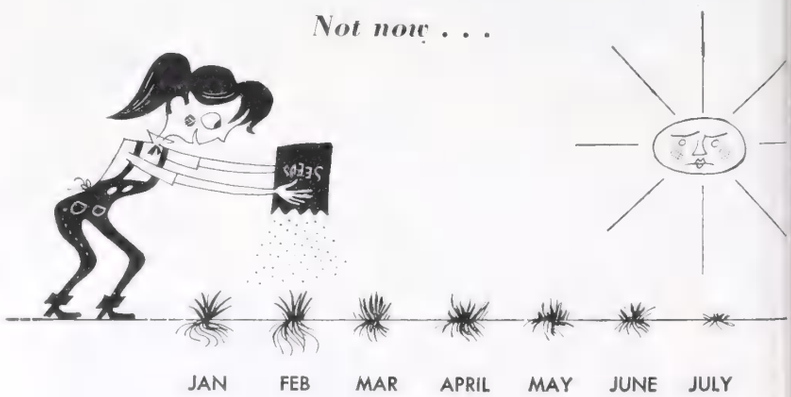
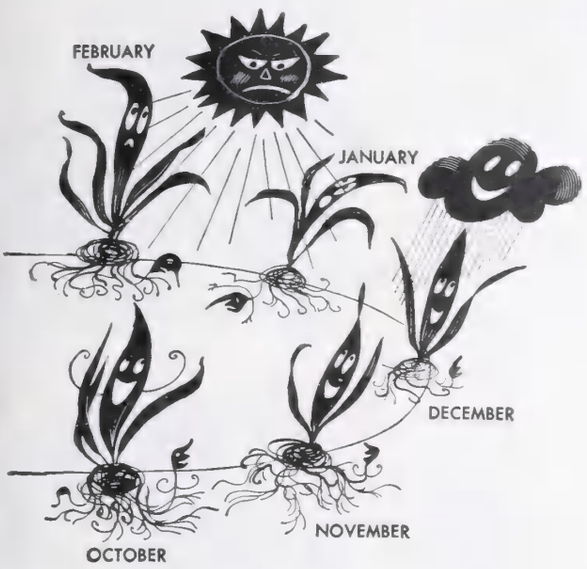
The best time



OCTOBER: Cool, short days and the abundant moisture in the ground offer ideal growing conditions for the cool-weather grasses (bluegrass, fescue and bent) relied upon for lawns in much of America. The weather is already too cool for most weeds which require warm weather to germinate and grow.

NOVEMBER: Seeds germinate more slowly now; grass plants also grow more slowly. New leaves are short, and usually hug the ground. If the lawn is vigorous and unshaded, rhizomes continue to push out, thickening the sod. (For this reason a fall-seeded lawn becomes so thick by spring that waiting weed seeds haven't soil space to sprout in.)

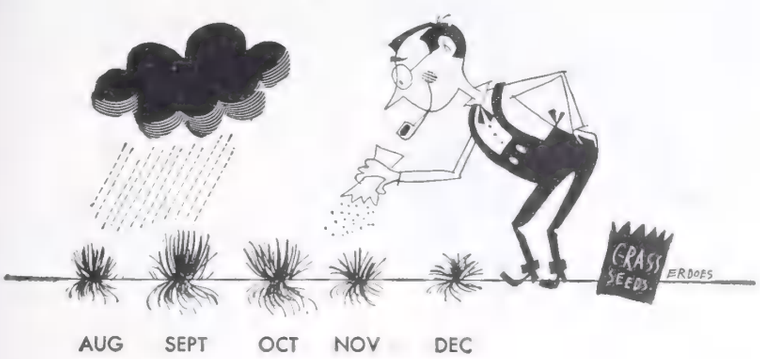


DECEMBER: Growth stops on days when the soil is frozen, resumes when it thaws. Leaves turn dark green if well supplied with nitrogen, otherwise turn a rusty "winter brown." Lawns seeded now (seed can even be sown on top of snow) sprout whenever a few sunny days warm the soil. Greatest danger is that seed may be washed away before it has a chance to sprout and anchor itself to the soil.

Not now . . .

Spring seedings germinate well, grow well for a few weeks. Then the soil gets hot, growth stops, weeds take over. By midsummer lawn is gone, must be reseeded.

to seed a lawn



JANUARY: Seeding now risky (probably will wash away). Fall-seeded lawn remains green if well fed, even though oldest leaves normally turn brown now. Exception: Shaded lawns stay green well into winter but then leaves wither, become thin, brown and stringy. Similar condition occurs in sunny lawns if soil remains frozen long (resembles summer drought injury).

FEBRUARY: Seeds sown now will result in a better lawn than those sown later, but usually the ground is still too wet to be worked enough to prepare it for seeding. Fall-seeded grass bursts into growth this month, even though soil temperatures may be only a bit above freezing. Roots push out rapidly. Result is a great thickening of thin sods (the reason why December seeding makes a better lawn than one done in spring).

MARCH: Lawns seeded now have a 3 to 1 chance of failure. Only if the weather remains cool through June will the grass make roots enough to survive the summer baking. Fall-seeded grass is exceptionally green now. (The new leaves are visible almost as soon as they start to grow because the (Please turn to page 315)

Fall seedings sprout just as ideal weather for grass occurs—crisp, sunny days, cool nights. Weeds, though, languish, are crowded out by the fast-growing grass.

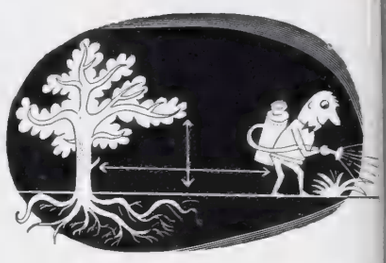
4. Apply only when weeds are growing actively. You won't get much effect if the weeds are resting because of drought or low temperature. Early October is latest practical time to treat lawn.

Eradicant killers, ones used for poison ivy or unwanted brush, are quite a different story. Here you apply an exceptionally powerful killer in massive doses. You want to wipe out all living plants in the area. This can be done at any time of year by increasing the concentration of the killer and the thoroughness of wetting pests as the weather dries.

5. To clean up a weedy garden, mow off the annual weeds (those that start fresh from seed each spring). Although their roots die later on in the fall, annual weeds have already sown seeds.

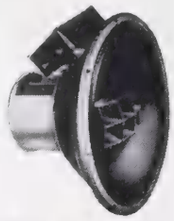
Perennial weeds, though, are worth killing now. They are tough but can be killed by a 2-shot attack: dalapon for grassy weeds, 2,4-D for the broadleaf kinds. Drench the weeds with these sprays. Spillage won't cause trouble because chemicals will break down before you are ready to re-plant.



If the garden has a serious infestation of perennial weeds, use as much as one pound of 2,4-D in the spray for each 1,000 square feet of garden. Cultivate the soil thoroughly after the weeds are poisoned. You can use borax as the killer; it is highly efficient, but you won't be able to use the land as a garden for 12 months afterwards. Alanap-1 is almost as effective against most garden weeds, both grassy and non-grassy, and it keeps the ground sterile only over the winter. It is still too new, however, to be available in all garden stores.

6. Keep brush killers from hitting trees and shrubs. Ammate and Esteron 245 or Weedone Brush Killer can wipe out unwanted poison ivy and underbrush without harming nearby trees if you work carefully. The spray concentration has already been adjusted so that it kills only if a plant has its bark drenched with the spray, so you need only stand with your back to desirable plants to protect them while you spray. The small amount of spray that may bounce back won't do any harm.

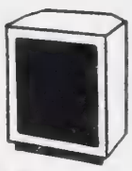
Ammate is diluted in a large volume of water, the others in a little kerosene or fuel oil. This makes Ammate harder to use in hilly land or areas where water is scarce. Kill is fast with Ammate but it kills grass in area.



7. Keep soil sterilants away from tree roots. Do not use Du Pont CMU or Dow Baron anywhere that tree roots might possibly have roamed. These killers are sure death to trees and shrubs. It takes only one root in contact with a treated area to kill the biggest tree.

These powerful killers are made for cleaning railroad and power line right-of-ways, but unfortunately they sometimes get into the hands of homeowners interested in ridding a driveway of weeds. This they will do—but at the risk of death for any trees that may have rooted under the driveway. Once in the soil, only soil bacteria will destroy these sterilants.

How far do tree roots spread? Most kinds of trees spread their roots 1½ times as far as their branches. This means you must allow at least twice the branch spread when using CMU or Baron.



8. Follow the manufacturer's directions explicitly. Read the label carefully. Following directions accurately can make a big difference in the results.

New Crabgrass Killer

Preliminary tests on the new arsenical killer look good, but there is much we don't know. We do know many lawn grasses are burned by the arsenical if used when the temperature is in the 90's. At 65 to 70 degrees, there is apparently excellent kill of crabgrass but fescue grasses suffer. Zoysia, bent and Bermuda grass escape harm. Bluegrass may be tinged, but not nearly as much as by potassium cyanate. Best informed guess is that new arsenical will replace potassium cyanate for cool weather use.

Mr. Daniels was willing to be bombed

ADMIRALS smiled when, in 1921, he claimed air power could sink battleships. Josephus Daniels, the Navy secretary, said he was "prepared to stand bareheaded on the deck of a battleship and let General Mitchell take a crack at me with bombing airplane."

But in an actual test, the most heavily armored dreadnaught ever built sank in minutes under the sledgehammer blows of the world's first 1-ton bombs—bombs built to Billy Mitchell's order.

In his early fight for a strong air force, Mitchell eventually saw very dark days. Yet he never lost faith in the American people, nor they in him. For they recognized his clear foresight and great fighting heart as part of the real American spirit.

It is this courageous spirit that makes America strong—so strong, in fact, that our country's Savings Bonds are regarded as one of the finest, safest investments in all the world.

Why not take advantage of that strength? Use United States Savings Bonds to guard your future, and your country's future. Invest in them regularly—and hold onto them.

THE BEST TIME TO SEED A LAWN

usual brown sheath around the lower part of the leaf bundle is missing—broken off in leaf raking last fall or by snow and ice in the winter.) Exception: If freezing weather returns, growth stops and the tips of the leaves redden. Lawn then has mid-winter look.

APRIL: Lawns seeded now sprout quickly into velvety carpets, deceptively lush and green for the moment and decidedly better looking than the fall-seeded lawn which now takes on a duller appearance because the leaves produced in the winter gradually turn yellow.

MAY: Don't waste time and seed trying to start a lawn this late. Existing roots will lengthen a bit, but grass won't produce new roots now because the soil is becoming warm and the days so long. Better feed the fall-seeded lawn again to slow the yellowing of its older leaves.

JUNE: Seeding now is almost useless. Well-fed established grass will continue to put out some new leaves if kept watered. Watering helps two ways: supplies moisture needed for growth, keeps soil temperature down.

JULY: Save the seed! Soil is too hot even for roots of existing grass. (Many die back to the crown of the plant, and weaker plants die—often the whole spring-seeding.)

AUGUST: Seeds sprout quickly, go on to result in fine lawn if regular rains or waterings keep soil cool enough for needed deep rooting. Lawns seeded last fall now pop out a heavy crop of leaves that are broader and a deeper green than in recent months.

SEPTEMBER: Growth is rapid, in both new seedings and those that survived the summer. New leaves on the latter are definitely shorter and fatter than they were in the spring flush. Leaves produced back in June and July now gradually yellow and die.

essential. Although they, too, are seldom as long-lived as the daffodils, the so-called species or botanical tulips perform admirably for several years. Since they bloom early, it's wise to set them where they'll be able to keep their faces clean in early spring rains. Cover bare soil with a mulch, perhaps of rock chips, or plant bulbs in sod or ground cover. You also might try naturalizing the multi-flowered tulips, which are shorter stemmed and more informal in character than the taller proud beauties of the Darwin-Breeder-Cottage clan, used for showier planting.

3. Forcing. If you have a sunny window in a room with moderate heat, you can force a succession of tulip bulbs into bloom throughout the winter. Single and double early-flowered types are easiest to force. If you live in an apartment, put the bulb packages in the back of your refrigerator and after six to eight weeks bring them out a few at a time and pot them. If you live in a house do the potting in the late fall and leave them outside in a coldframe for an equal length of time. When ready to force, place the potted bulbs in full sun where the temperature doesn't go above 60° at night (bedrooms usually offer such conditions). Water freely. Once the flowers start to open, they'll last longer if they are moved out of direct sun. Discard forced bulbs after flowering.

4. Cutting. As cut flowers, tulips are favorites, offering every color but clear blue, and a wide variety of shapes and sizes. In the cutting garden you can enjoy the flamboyant, but disease-susceptible parrot tulips. Their weak necks won't matter since you can easily wire strength into them. If you're a flower arrangement fan, you'll enjoy the lily-flowered, peony-flowered, Rembrandt, Triumph and perhaps the multi-flowered types. In buying for the cutting garden, you can let your fancy run free in trying a few of each, since the finished project will be indoors—not the hodgepodge of the cutting garden.

BOOKS FOR GARDENERS

Hardy Bulbs, by R. Milton Carleton. Rinehart, New York, N. Y. 1955. $1.50.

Garden books for beginners seldom are much good, but this is an exception. It was written by one of the most knowledgeable bulb men in the country, but he writes as a home gardener, answering the questions of the true beginner, managing to avoid talking down to his reader. He warns against the traps that catch the beginner. He shows the fallacies in the usual recommendations given by most garden writers when they discuss bulbs. He proposes programs so sound that he can guarantee results you will applaud. If you are an old hand at bulb growing, you may sniff at the varieties he recommends, but you will have to admit that a beginner can't possibly go wrong on them.

Amazingly, it's all done in 91 pages and with a refreshing breeziness, as note this sensible advice on fertilizing, a major topic of humbug in garden writing.

"Bone meal performs a useful function because it gives the gardener something to do. He feels he must apply a fertilizer, so throwing some of the white powder (which does have a convincing smell) onto the soil satisfies him. Since it does no harm, everyone is happy. Personally I prefer to eliminate the bone meal and use the money to buy more bulbs."

I agree with him.

The Complete Book of Bulbs by F. F. Rockwell and Esther C. Grayson, The American Garden Guild and Doubleday & Co., Inc., Garden City, N. Y., 1953. $5.95.

This is a practical book, written from 50 years' experience and an admitted fondness for all things that grow from bulbs. The illustrations offer real help and are not at all the usual seed-catalog reprints. The text is interestingly written and at all times realistic. Read the following about daffodils; it precedes a complete discussion on the pests that have been known to attack daffodils:

"Having grown daffodils for well over fifty years and in many types of soil, and having never once had to dust, spray, or fumigate for any disease or insect pest, we do not burst out into goose pimples when we look through bulletins and articles devoted to narcissus troubles. The full extent of our treatment for these easily grown flowers has consisted of an occasional removal of a plant or the destruction of a bulb that looked 'sick.' On not more than a half dozen occasions, out of several hundred varieties, we have discarded all the bulbs of a weak-growing variety."

Or read (page 178) the advice on how to plant "the minor bulbs" (crocus and the like) so they won't get their faces muddy in the spring rains: "never in front of a bare-soil perennial border, or in rows, or in groups in any open soil."

The section on garden lilies is exceptionally fine. It, too, faces realities. As for new varieties, "doubtless many will be 'improvements' in name only: One shudders to think, for instance, of a flaming orange Madonna lily—by no means an impossibility in the not-distant future."

Twenty-five Historic Years by Edward I. Farrington, Massachusetts Horticultural Society, Boston, Mass., 1955. $3.

Here is a fascinating history of dedicated amateur gardeners and an experiment now 126 years old. Only the quarter century, 1929 to 1954, is detailed in the present volume, but the society and its members are venerable, so much necessarily goes back nearly to the beginning.

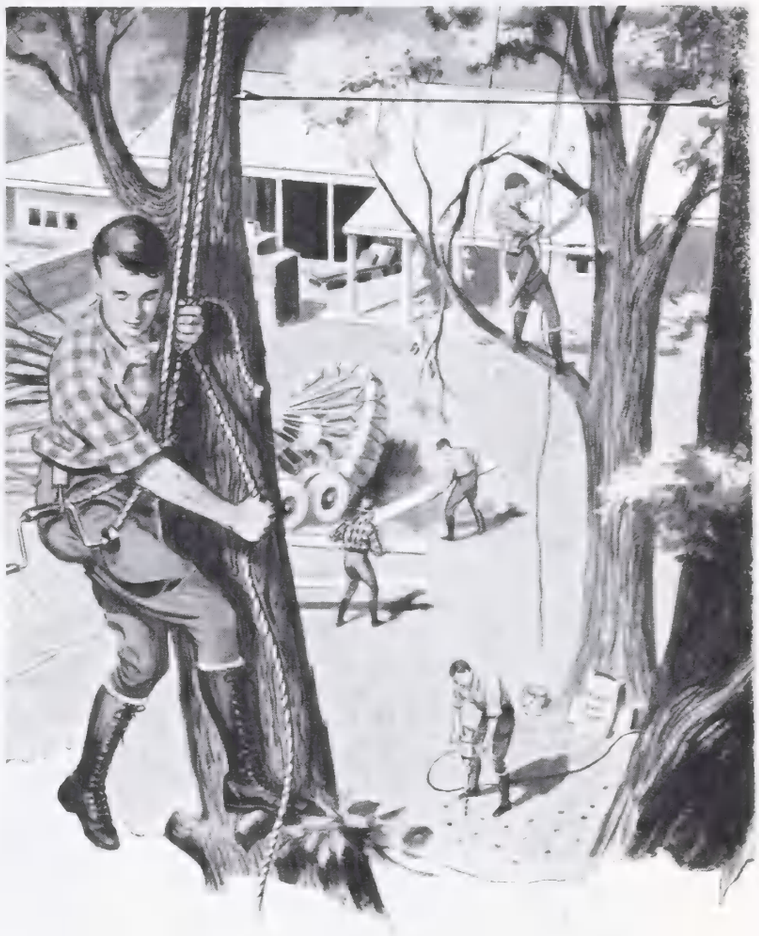
It's a modest account, very human in its approach. At no time does it forget that the Society is people, and with few exceptions, people who garden strictly for pleasure. The few professionals, the estate gardeners who through the years created marvelous spectacles at the Society's famous flower shows, and the small band that author Farrington himself guided for 23 years as the working staff at Horticultural Hall, keep discreetly almost out of the picture, as you would expect in a Bostonian institution.

But it is not all dates and famous names. The minutiae of the struggles to keep afloat through wars and hard times receive their due. We learn why the elevator is so small, and that the rumor that federal agents uncovered a bootlegger's still in Horticultural Hall is indeed true. The financial picture for all major flower shows is here, down to the last penny of profit or loss. "Horticulture," the house organ of the Society gets similar treatment, as well it might since it followed Ed Farrington into the official family when he came as secretary in 1924.

Everything wasn't always serene, of course, and the squabbles aren't glossed over. But they are discussed "Boston style," which is to say with real calmness, even when the subjects were as "hot" as the requiring of flower show judges to write out their reasons for all to see, or the library recataloging project that was rather "lightly taken up" as Dr. Merrill was to comment years later when the cost was nearing $38,000. Even the perennial battle between the janitors and "women who insist upon throwing bread on the sidewalk for the birds" isn't overlooked.

There is nostalgia, too, for little things like the gradual loss of interest in dahlias that forced the abandoning of the great dahlia shows once featured on Massachusetts Avenue each fall, and for big events like the Centennial show and Lord Aberconway's visit to the 1937 Spring show.

Since 1947 the Society has been managed by Arno Nehrling to a new record-breaking prosperity. This story, too, is included in Mr. Farrington's review.



Even though you may never have visited a New England garden, you will like the book. You won't learn a thing about gardening techniques, but a garden involves more than manual skill, and it is some of this extra zest which Twenty-five Historic Years manages to instill in the reader.

The Complete Book Of Annuals by F. F. Rockwell & Esther C. Grayson. The American Garden Guild and Doubleday & Company, Inc., Garden City, N. Y., 1955. $5.95.

This is one of the better books in that vast crop produced for the beginning gardener. It is written by knowledgeable gardeners who unashamedly admit their plant likes and dislikes. The chapter on "The Ten Leaders" is the best information on these annuals that you are likely to find in print.

The "Catalog of Annuals" is quite complete, although it contains just about the same information you will find in several other books. Colored pictures are used generously, but I am somewhat disappointed that the publishers didn't make much more effective choices for these pages. —J. E. H.

Check up on summer

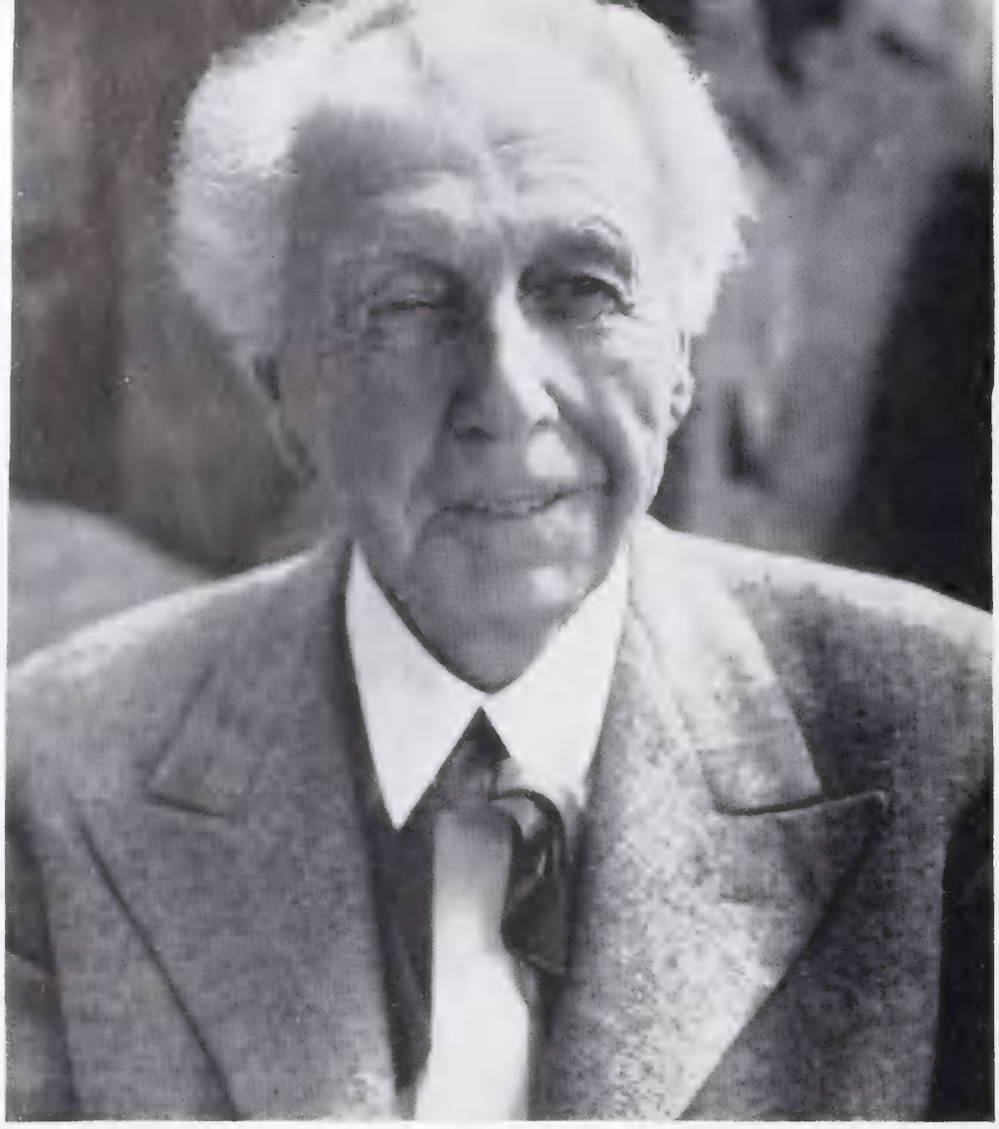
Summer can be rough on those beautiful trees that are the joy of your outdoor living room. Storms, drought, insects weaken trees. Then the weight of winter's ice and snow adds to the damage.

An annual checkup at this time of year is good protection. Davey men cable and brace weakened forks, prune away dead wood and catch any trouble while it is in early stages.



Feeding now will give your trees a quicker comeback from summer damage and will make them more beautiful next summer.

Davey men are schooled to recognize and treat all the many ailments which affect trees. Their techniques are efficient and their equipment the most modern in the business. Candlelight flatters gardens, too Fat, long-burning candles held off the ground by curved ready-made brackets provide enough soft light to see along a path or up and down steps. The special candle, sold with bracket, burns for 48 hours and is then replaced. Garden designed by Herbert Frank for Christensen Nursery at the San Mateo Floral Fiesta, California.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Mexican lanterns hung two by two among plants in patio provide night lighting for parties in the garden of Mr. and Mrs. George Reade, Sr. Mrs. Reade had brass curtain rods bent and painted black for the posts from which lanterns hang on custom-made iron frames. Rods slip in and out of ground, can be regrouped easily.

Decorator's Diary

Notes by a decorator who visits the shops and showrooms with an open eye and an open mind, on the lookout for the new and different

Ran into a pleasant, problem-solving surprise in Jack Lenor Larsen's showroom last week. He has most sensibly converted tag ends and odd pieces of his beautiful handloomed fabrics into kapok-filled throw cushions. They're all piled into a sort of pot-luck basket which just as likely as not may produce exactly the accent cushion you're looking for, sparing you the bother of shopping for fabric and having the pesky things made up. I dipped in and came up with a pair of exactly right bronzey green circular cushions for Mrs. Wilson's sofa. Dipped in again and hooked a square gold one for myself. Prices start at about $9—not bad for hand-woven craftsmanship.

There's no question in my mind that Yogi Berra knows more about decoration than Jane Post Breckenridge, career woman extraordinary and my former college roommate. She has lately settled herself rather elegantly in two rooms and a kitchen on Sutton Place. And guess who's doing the settling! Jane, a big-wheel type in an advertising agency, claims she needs a desk in her bedroom even more than she needs a dressing table, or at least she needs a dressing table that she can also write on and keep papers in. In reverse, she's asking for something everybody with a sitting-room-guest-room is looking for—only they want a desk that can pinch-hit on occasion for a dressing table. All hands could be made happy with the desk John Wisner has designed for the Johnson Furniture Company. It's a graceful piece in soft grayed mahogany, and called "Country Directoire" but it's nothing as fancy as it may sound, completely free of gimcrack ornament. In fact, it would be as appropriate in a family sitting room as in a feminine bedroom. When it's closed you might not recognize it as a desk. Open, its top hinges down and creates a 15″-wide leather-lined surface for writing and/or make up. And it seems to me that almos

Because Samsonite card tables stay beautiful, stay sturdy so much longer, they're America's favorite TV-snack tables

All over America, TV-snack time is Samsonite time because Samsonite is made to "take" constant use, made for more wear than you'll ever give it. Samsonite stays beautiful because spills can't stain the upholstered top, a damp cloth wipes it clean. Samsonite stays sturdy because the legs and frame are made of tubular steel. It folds easily, compactly. Strong enough to hold all the fixings for a buffet supper, it's more than strong enough for week in, week out TV parties, games, work. winter air conditioning?

See your Lennox dealer-expert about the heating system that sets you up for Lennox All-Season Air Conditioning

Don't be left in the cold this winter to shiver and shovel in a home with an old-fashioned furnace. Now is the time to see your Lennox dealer-expert—the one man in your community best qualified to equip your home with winter air conditioning.

That's the beauty of the Lennox All-Season Air Conditioning Plan. You can start with Lennox winter or summer air conditioning and add the other later. Scientific tree care . . .

The Bartlett Tree Research Laboratories were established by the Bartlett Tree Expert Company in 1926 at Stamford, Connecticut. Here on a 200 acre experimental ground, ideas are tested and developed under actual growing conditions. There are indoor laboratories, too, for the study of insects and diseases which beset shade trees. In fact, it is a complete, down-to-earth laboratory for shade tree ills and ailments.

It is a place for Bartlett scientists to expand the research that already has initiated many innovations in tree care. One: the introduction of a complete, balanced, shade tree food fed through holes in the ground. Another: the successful control of one specific disease by use of chemicals introduced directly into the sap stream of the tree. Still another: developing an emergency sub-irrigation treatment with liquid food and conditioning chemicals introduced under high pressure.

This practical, scientific laboratory, in addition to its continual search for new ideas for the protection of shade trees, diagnoses the day-to-day problems encountered by our fieldmen. It is this that enables your Bartlett representative, with his knowledge of local conditions, to offer a service that is unique in the field of tree care. Call him today for a study of your tree situation. You will benefit by his recommendations.

DRESSES BY ANNE FOGARTY

"A home-to-be... turned inside out for all to see"

That's what one young bride said of her wedding gifts as they sat on display in her parents' home. She said something else too: She was glad her silver was Gorham* Sterling. So many people recognized it and congratulated her just because it was.

It's not surprising that people recognize Gorham Sterling . . . and recognize it as America's greatest name in solid silver. More Gorham Sterling is in use today than any other make. And there are more Gorham patterns to choose from, too.

Because Gorham has become such an American tradition, "Gorham" and "Sterling" have come to mean one and the same thing to people everywhere—a recognized symbol of a home's taste and breeding.

You can always be properly proud to tell your guests: "Yes, it's Gorham." And like your confident pride of ownership, the splendor of genuine Gorham Sterling never fades. Neither time nor use can dull its beauty. Nor can changing values detract from the esteem of the Gorham mark stamped forever on the back of every piece.

Best of all, Gorham Sterling is surprisingly easy to own or to give. Just ask your authorized jeweler or department store.

The Gorham Sterling knife handle is made from a single seamless silver tube—not two halves soldered together. It is dent-resistant and rattleproof. Gorham Sterling place settings—including knife, fork, teaspoon, salad fork, cold cream and flat or hollow-handle butter spreader—start from $29.75 (Federal Tax incl.). DECORATOR'S DIARY any room could provide space for it. It's 38″ wide, and 41½″ high and ordinarily 16″ deep. Open, it's 25″ deep.

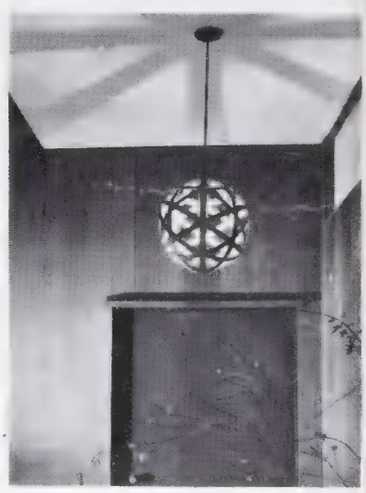
It just occurs to me that the Babsons could use this piece in the dining area of their living room. That desk flap might make a handy serving surface.



It must have been Kismet that led me directly to Boris Kroll's showroom in search of fabrics for the Cunninghams' remodeled town house. And a pretty dazzlingly remodeled town house this has turned out to be. Understated elegance as far as the eye can reach—flush white marble mantelpieces, silvery-gray grass-cloth walls, gray vinyl flooring inset with strips of pewter—and by no means an easy assignment when it comes to selecting appropriate fabrics. But there they were spread out before me in Kroll's new "Mediterranean" series—an Arabian Nights assortment of glinting brocades and textured solids in co-ordinated groups, numbering more than 550 individual pieces, ready for upholstery, draperies, cushions, bedspreads. Their woven patterns were inspired by ancient Egyptian, Coptic and Arabic art objects, running the gamut from an Egyptian armband to Kufic calligraphy, in a palette of jewel colors that might have dazzled Ali Baba, from hot and fiery opal pinks to the greens of tourmaline and malachite.

"Minarets" in brocade

Out of this fabulous trove I chose the brocade called "Minarets," to upholster the satiny-silver magnesium-framed headboards in Mrs. C.'s bedroom. This pattern's trim, repetitive geometry suggests the domed shapes of Islamic towers; its color is a melting of sapphire, emerald and indigo, subtly highlighted with an almost hidden iridescence of blue Lurex metallic threads. You must see it yourself—and this goes for all the other brocades in this series—in order to appreciate the provocative wizardry of metal threads woven under instead of over the surface of a fabric. On the practical side, these fabrics are of Bemberg and viscose, plus Lurex wherever metallics are used, and are loomed 54 inches wide.

Such a delight to find clients like the Roses, who just seem naturally to understand that decorating isn't always a matter of filling every available empty space with a tangible, concrete thing. They appreciate assymetry, and they love an occasional blank wall. But the thing that most endears them to me is the way they caught on to the entrancing variety of decorative effects you can enjoy just by creating shadows. For instance, their new house in Connecticut needed a lighting fixture to illuminate the foyer and to give some hint of the unfettered drama and imagination that architect, client and (modestly) decorator have lavished on the rooms within. I found just the proper "introduction" in Helena Buckingham's open sphere ceiling fixture, a veritable astrolabe of sleek brass bands, as modern as the moment, yet as compatible with the Toltec stone they've set in their fieldstone entry way as it is with the Chinese portrait on silk that hangs on the inside hall wall. And it was Doris Rose (not I) who quickly saw the shadow-play potentials here. "Why," she said, ecstatically, "when the light plays through the sphere the shadows will pattern the ceiling like the

Heritage Henredon fine furniture

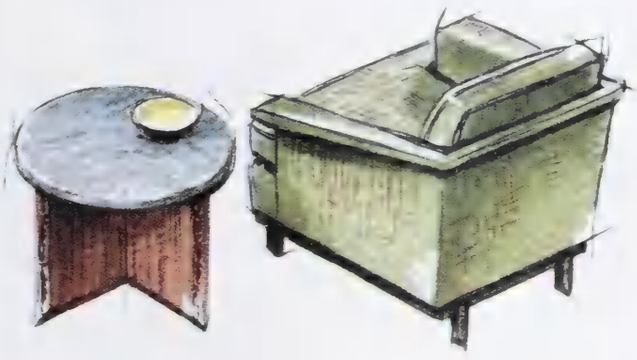
He "belongs to the present . . . he is a link with the past. One feels a sense of never-ending richness, potential, heart and meaning." The New York Times.



And of his buildings, "as if they were to take their place in a happier world—one of light, of grace." So says The American Academy of Arts and Letters.

This is Frank Lloyd Wright, a man who designs for real people, respecting their roots, their hopes. Of all forms, furniture seems a natural expression of his genius.

Frank Lloyd Wright

Now applies to furniture a genius that is world-renowned

Frank Lloyd Wright, the prophet of new ideas in architecture, now for the first time applies his visionary ability to designing a group of dining room, bedroom and living room furniture.

The Frank Lloyd Wright concept of furniture will create a new form of family happiness in today's home, a new adventure in freedom and dignity, a new flexibility of function and design.

When you see this fresh, imaginative furniture, you'll feel its quality and integrity. In each piece you'll find the sensible, sensitive touch of the man who is the most creative designer of our time. Everywhere the beauty is integral with the nature of the materials.

The collection will be produced (exclusively) by Heritage-Henredon. Look for the signature of Frank Lloyd Wright on each piece. For the name of the dealer nearest you, see page 342 or write to Heritage-Henredon, Box HB11, High Point, North Carolina.

rays of a star!" And so they do. The fixture, from Kneedler-Fauchere, comes already wired in two sizes, 11 inches or 14 inches in diameter, and is hung either with a brass pipe or a 2-foot length of brass chain.

I detect the return of the Embroidered Look, something I remember from my childhood when ladies passed leisurely afternoons with floss and hoop, industriously covering everything from pillowcases to tray cloths with padded buds and satin-stitched leaves. What the ladies were doing was an interesting, double-barreled job of creating texture and pattern simultaneously, and I notice that current fabrics tend to be giving us the same dual effect. This isn't so surprising when you remember how long texture has been important to home furnishings. And by now I suspect our eyes are beginning to feel the need of something more than texture, so pattern-with-texture supplies the need. Many times the embroidered look isn't stitched on the fabric at all, but is merely an effect created by the weave or by flocking. But one of the handsomest new fabrics in Jofa's extremely handsome new line is a real, bona fide embroidered linen, which offers so many endless and elegant possibilities it makes your head swim.

The pattern is a continuous repeat of what I take to be a French Provincial scroll, but I plan to use it as spread, draperies and slipper chair upholstery in Mrs. Harrington's Chippendale bedroom. I am also toying with the idea of putting it into Mrs. Nelson's provincial living room. I see it as place mats, as a tablecloth, as café curtains. It is one of those felicitously scaled all-over patterns, neither too bold nor too picky, that seems to work as successfully in large areas as in small. Fabric itself is 50 per cent linen mixed with cotton and rayon, comes 50 inches wide, and in natural embroidered in beige, gold, celadon, bright blue or turquoise.

Thought I'd never find a lamp base worthy of Helen Knowles' made-to-order modern furniture and her collection of Indonesian wood carvings. (I flatly refused to have wiring piped through the head of one of those precious goddesses; principles are principles, I say!)

But yesterday I went to the Newel-Hayes studio, opened the door, and found myself staring right at the very lamp—a square wood pedestal, 18″ tall (approximately 32″ with bowl fixture), patterned in a design that looks so like marquetry that I still can hardly believe that it isn't marquetry at all.

What appears to be an elaborate inlay of multicolored woods in a sort of squared-off medallion is actually a pattern stained in the maple base by a wax-resist process similar to batik, the famous craft of the Dutch East Indies. The wood is coated with wax, a design is scraped through the wax, and the exposed wood is colored with a stain that doesn't conceal the wood grain. Stains are natural-looking wood colors, hence the look of marquetry. Possibilities for this kind of thing are mightily intriguing. I can see furniture given pattern and color—the doors of a chest, the top of a table, or the back of a chair—or even a wall covered with a batik mural, and the designs can be as individual as whoever orders them. Heard of a railroad man whose office wall is a map of the line, done in batik.

This Replica of a 1000 Year-Old Copper Urn MADE IN EGYPT...

FREE

To New Members of the Around-the-World Shoppers Club

To demonstrate the unique thrill of receiving beautiful and exotic gifts from foreign lands at less than half their U.S. value, we invite you to accept FREE this handsome copper urn from the fabulous land of the Pharoahs and the mighty pyramids! Hand-hammered by native Egyptian craftsmen in traditions going back over 1,000 years, the urn is adorned with replicas of scarabs—carved in bluestone—and with a centerpiece bearing the image of the sacred Sun . . . two of the most representative symbols of ancient Egypt.

From Egypt—Land of Magnificence!

Your copper urn, which measures 8" high, will come to you from Egypt, the most wondrous empire of the ancient world! Egyptians were the first physicians, the first engineers, the first mathematicians, the first canal builders, shipbuilders and law makers. They discovered the movements of the planets and devised the first accurate calendar. It is appropriate that this urn is made of copper, because it was with the development of coppersmithy 45 centuries before Christ that Egyptian civilization began! Its burnished beauty will be a constant reminder of the opulence of this ageless civilization. Its handsome ancient Arabic design will bring the mystery and romance of this fabled country into your own home.

Gifts from the World Over

Please accept this handwrought copper urn from the historic land of the Nile with our compliments for joining our Club—and then sit back and await the further pleasures to come. As a passenger on our magic carpet, you will receive a surprise gift each month from a different foreign land. Your gifts will come direct to your home postpaid and duty free in packages decorated with exotic foreign stamps! Each gift is guaranteed to be worth twice and more what you pay. Furthermore, you may cancel after receiving your Egyptian copper urn or at any future time. Mail the coupon now, while this fascinating copper urn from ancient Egypt is being offered FREE!

NAME SWEATER. It's been a long time since we've seen anything as instantly "wantable" as this. It's made of soft-as-cashmere Orlon in light blue, pink or white, and the silky white Dacron lining has a hand-painted repeat pattern of your first name! Specify whatever color you'd like for the name. Sizes 34-40. Better take a size larger than usual. Allow 3 weeks delivery. $14.95 ppd. Lee Hendry, Little Silver, N.J.

OLD SCHOOL TIE PIN harks back to a gentler era when grandfather, with spats and walking stick and exuding the good smell of bay rum, took his Sunday stroll. Sterling silver, $3.50; 14k gold, $11. Matching cuff links are $5 and $33 respectively. Tax, post. incl. Holiday House, 111 Bellevue Theatre Bldg., Upper Montclair, New Jersey.

BEST OF ALL. We've struggled with and sworn at dozens of can openers in our day, and have finally found a humdinger. The Sieger (that's German for "victor") bites decisively into any size tin, even those clover-shaped herring cans! Then the sharp-toothed ratchet cuts around the edge in jig-time. Hardened steel in black finish, $1 ppd. Order from Gourmet Mart, 8995 Biscayne Blvd., Miami Shores, Florida.

NOW . . . Storm Windows need not cost you up to $14.00 apiece. American industry has developed a lightweight flexible product that enables you to seal out wintry blasts for only 49½¢ a window! Imagine it! For pennies per window you can insulate EVERY ROOM in your home! This new material was developed by the Gary plant of a billion-dollar American manufacturing firm—for use by the U.S. Government during the last war. It looks like glass, yet can't peel off, never chips, shatters or rattles. Actually flexible like rubber. Has a tensile strength of over one ton per square inch. Crystal clear, not milky or yellowish like some plastic materials. Weighs less than 1/10th of the lightest glass windows ever developed. Even a large window comes to less than 8 oz. Not affected by snow, sleet, rain or dampness—because it's 100% waterproof. Won't crack even at 53 degrees BELOW FREEZING! Use and re-use it YEAR AFTER YEAR for winter comfort and protection.

STRETCHES WITHOUT BREAKING!

This amazing storm window stretches without breaking! Has tensile strength of over one ton per square inch! Push it with your foot—it stretches—then springs back undamaged! Developed for Armed Forces in last war. Installs quickly, easily inside windows of all sizes. Made by world-famous REYNOLDS METALS COMPANY.

LOW-COST HEALTH PROTECTION

You can hardly see this TRANS-KLEER storm window—it's wonderfully transparent, yet it protects your loved ones from winter's frigid blasts. And each window costs only 49½¢ each!

Sensational Discovery Used By Army To Fight Cold

One of the big problems of the last war was how to defend our troops and protect equipment against the ravages of Arctic winters. One of the world's greatest manufacturing companies was ordered to build a special plant and soon millions of yards of this new material was moving out to Alaska, the Aleutians, Iceland and Greenland. It was not available to the public because every inch went to protect our men, vehicles, planes and weapons. Finally, it was released to the public and ever since the demand has been greater than the supply! The Gary plant of famous REYNOLDS METALS COMPANY is working round-the-clock trying to supply it!

Use Year After Year—No Upkeep Cost!

At winter's end just fold away your Trans-Kleer like cloth for use next year. You can air the room anytime, too—lift the Adheso border to let in fresh air, then press back and it's sealed tight again! Cleans easily with a damp rag. It's no wonder so many home owners, hospitals, churches and public buildings use this tried and tested REYNOLDS product! TRANS-KLEER comes in kits 36 inches by 432 inches and costs you only $4.95 complete with Adheso border! That is enough for 10 windows—each measuring 10.8 sq. ft.—just 49½c each! In all you receive 108 SQUARE FEET for only $4.95! Good GLASS storm windows cost from $7.95 to $16.00—for ten you'd have to pay $79 to $160.00. With this remarkable REYNOLDS product you not only save a terrific amount in the purchase price, you also cut down enormously on your fuel bills!

Install Trans-Kleer Windows in 5 Minutes

Trans-Kleer storm windows require no nails, hooks, screws or tools. No back-breaking toil or broken glass to contend with. Cut off required amount, trim to fit the inside of your window, large or small, square, round, rectangular – it makes no difference! Then press on the special Adheso border supplied and your storm window is firmly in place. Simple, easy – a child can install them! And Trans-Kleer windows, because of the LOW CONDUCTIVITY development give you real winter protection, actually keep wintry blasts out of your home.

2,000,000 Windows Sold!

For years, demand for Trans-Kleer has outstripped the supply. Lucky buyers of the first windows told their neighbors and the word spread. Last year alone, over 2,000,000 were sold, yet thousands of folks were disappointed when the supply ran out. Advertising had to be curtailed and our huge supply was exhausted earlier than anticipated. There will be another wild scramble for them this year. Production has been planned for 2,500,000 windows this year—but even this huge total might not be enough unless you act FAST!

Bertha Schaefer used easy-care fabrics of Du Pont nylon to decorate this beautiful living-dining room.

Easy care from curtains to carpeting

because every fabric is Du Pont Nylon

Everywhere you look in this room you see colorful, easy-care beauty because every fabric is made of Du Pont nylon. Gaily printed nylon curtains dramatize the windows, yet need no fussy care. Nylon frieze and armure cover the chairs for luxury and long wear. The couch is upholstered in beautiful nylon tweed that takes the rugged wear of youngsters in its stride. And what better way to complete this work-saving room than with carpeting that offers all the beauty, long wear and easy care of 100% Du Pont nylon. Nylon armure with its rich colors and interesting design makes luxurious upholstery that wears and wears, needs little care. The name "armure" is derived from a fabric first used at the time of the Crusades and woven with the small interlaced motif of chain armor.

AGED LIKE VINTAGE WINE
(Smoking alone takes 30 days!)

Jordan's GENUINE
VIRGINIA HAM

NEARLY 300 years ago, Virginia colonists sent to England hams of a distinctive savory flavor that soon were acclaimed by gourmet and royalty throughout the capitals of Europe. Both the fame and famous flavor have endured. Today, as then, the true Virginia ham is one of the world's delicacies.

Each magnificent ham now hanging in our aging rooms, slowly cured, smoked to a rich mahogany hue, aged approx. one year, has been tended by hand through each unhurried step—as we have done for the past 115 years. For example, we keep hickory fires going day and night for 30 days, while the juices drip and the pungent smoke permeates the meat.

Just before shipment, each ham (in a 40-hour process) is soaked, simmered, the skin removed, the fat trimmed, then glazed with sugar and baked with wine to a savory feast of firm, sweet and tender meat.

Your Jordan's ham arrives ready to be enjoyed, needs no heating. It keeps for weeks and weeks. Traditional for Christmas dinner . . . perfect for cocktail party or buffet.

Sealed in amber cellophane, nested in burgundy tissue in Old Virginia Smokehouse box (carving, serving and keeping suggestions enclosed), here is a magnificent gift for those you especially wish to please this year, and a grand treat for your family.

Our hams are prepared to please discerning people, and we guarantee complete satisfaction. Weight 8 to 13 lbs. cooked; $1.89 per lb. (net cooked wt.) shipped anywhere in continental U. S. Please specify whether wanted now; for Christmas; or other date.

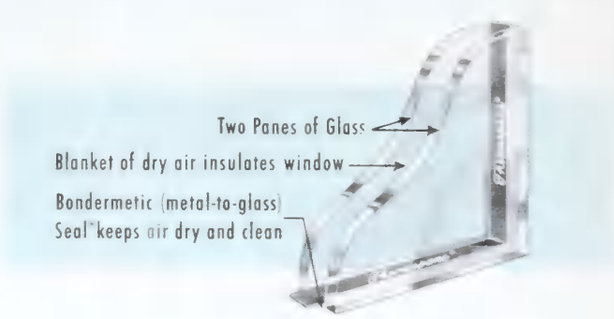
Good living just blossoms in this kind of warmth



Home of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Adelman, Fox Point, Wisc. Architect: Frank Lloyd Wright

It's not only the feeling of spaciousness you get with walls of glass . . . you enjoy the warmth of winter sun . . . the beauty of changing colors . . . the excitement of outdoors. Friends who've experienced the difference can tell you what a lift it gives to living.

To enjoy your window walls to the fullest, you need *Thermopane insulating glass. This permanent window insulation gives you more comfort the year 'round. It brings you sizeable economies in heating and air conditioning. It makes rooms quieter, for it muffles outdoor noise.

Beautiful design with walls of glass . . . sensible design with the permanent insulation of Thermopane. This teaming up of the aesthetic and the practical has put enjoyment of home on a level beyond the dreams of past generations.

For more information on Thermopane insulating glass, call the L·O·F Distributor or Dealer listed under "Glass" in your phone book yellow pages. Or write to Department 1115, Libbey·Owens·Ford Glass Co., 608 Madison Avenue, Toledo 3, Ohio.

Design for a modern kitchen by Huson Jackson, A.I.A.

"CERAMIC TILE MAKES THE DIFFERENCE... EASY TO WORK WITH...RELAXING TO LIVE WITH..."

Huson Jackson

To help create a warm, functional kitchen, Architect Huson Jackson used ceramic tile . . . and captured this rare combination for work-free convenience and relaxed living.

The semi-separation of the breakfast area—to the right of the ceramic tiled cooking island—affords a pleasant place for eating and relaxation. In the kitchen section an aqua tone ceramic tile wall from floor to ceiling keynotes an easily cleaned, colorful work center. The tiled counter tops and drainboards guarantee lifelong service and economy. Why? Ceramic tile won't burn, scratch or stain!

A ceramic tile floor is used throughout—linking kitchen and outdoor patio into a single expansive living space when the sliding window wall is open. No waxing here! Still another work-saving, wife-saving feature of tile. But why not see your local tile contractor soon—he'll tell you about ceramic tile applications for your home.

IMPORTANT: When building or remodeling, ask your ceramic tile contractor about the new adhesive method for installing ceramic tile. It can save you money. And be sure to see the wide range of colors, too!

Get ceramic tile remodeling and new construction ideas from the colorful new brochure "Ideas Unlimited" . . . plus a folder on ideas used in Huson Jackson's design. Both for 10¢. Write to Tile Council of America, Dept. HB-11, Room 3401, 10 East 40th Street, New York; or Dept. HB-11, Room 933, 727 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles, California.

FINEST COMPLEMENT TO ANY KITCHEN COLOR

Here's a kitchen as practical as it is beautiful. Provides two handy sink areas with a double bowl, double drainboard model and a single bowl Sit-Down† model, both in stainless steel by ELKAY. So, whatever kitchen plans you make, or colors you choose, you'll love the permanent, silvery brightness of stainless steel that reflects surrounding color hues . . . complements any change in your kitchen color scheme.

†REG. T. M., PAT. PDG.

LEADING ARCHITECTS AGREE ON Superiority of Stainless Steel Sinks

Ask your architect about the advantages of ELKAY Lustertone, the stainless steel sink. More than likely he will point out the same features that appeal to leading architects across the country who regularly specify Lustertone. Permanent* beauty is the prime requisite that only stainless steel fulfills. But in addition, homemakers and architects alike know that kitchen sinks by ELKAY give much more: Carefree cleanliness without scouring or bleaching; resiliency that means less dish breakage; soundproofing that makes kitchens quieter; they never chip, rust, stain or discolor. Now, how about the cost? The surprise is that ELKAY Lustertone costs less than you think—actually costs less in the long run than ordinary sinks. There is a size and style for every plan, so see your plumbing contractor or kitchen cabinet dealer today.

*Only Lustertone sinks are guaranteed to outlast your home.

What more glorious gift for Christmas than one which rekindles in a friend the faith and love of America . . . that constantly reveals the riches of his fabulous American heritage. AMERICAN HERITAGE captures in words and pictures the rich art, the magnificent architecture, the exciting events, the fabulous individuals, the dauntless spirit that have made this land of ours so great.

Critics acclaim AMERICAN HERITAGE, say it "will give the reader a fuller knowledge of the American story and of the democratic foundations on which our government rests, thus making him a better American."[1] It is "a Christmas gift that's certain to evoke the ahs and ohs."[2] . . . a truly impressive gift for parents and children alike . . . a valuable addition to a family's heirloom library (your own included!) . . . "packed with historical treasures."[3] Interesting? — it is "by far the most interesting and strikingly beautiful magazine published in this country."[4] . . . all in all a rich fare, and not too solid or heavy."[5]—"so beautiful and interesting that we fail to see how any reader could resist adding it to his collection of fine books."[6]

Fine books, yes—but so modestly priced that a year's subscription costs little more than you might expect to pay for a single volume! A unique publishing concept, AMERICAN HERITAGE is a magazine in book form, bringing you the American past 6 times a year in rich, vivid, true detail. Every issue is a fine book for permanent enjoyment . . . a big 8½" x 11", casebound between beautiful, durable board covers. Every issue is also a fine magazine . . . containing 14 varied articles by top writers and 25 or more full color pages of old prints, maps, photographs, art treasures and unusual Americana . . . with no advertising to intrude. A year's 6 issues make a wonderful gift—a gift that honors the good taste of you who give it and those who receive it—"an ideal present to give to the person who has everything. No one has ever had anything like this."[7] . . . just the thing to send, for Christmas, to that person for whom you are seeking the unusual."[8]

PANTRY SHELF NEWS

By JULIE POLSHEK

An unusually fine cheese spread blended of Gorgonzola and cream cheeses was recently sent me for tasting. It's called Man-of-the-House Party Cheese, and, by way of a pertinent sidelight, was created by a man for serving in his own home.

Fine Gorgonzola, mellowed by subtle spices and flavorings, dominates the interesting spread; it's a pure cheese blend, free of any sort of "fillers." Taken out of the refrigerator a little before use, it acquires consistency much like soft butter making it easy to spread on canapés or sandwiches. Or combine it with sour cream, sweet cream or salad dressing to create a cocktail dip. Another suggested use: Spread the cheese on hamburgers or steak before broiling; results are exceedingly interesting and tasty. Keeping qualities are remarkable; even after opening jar's vacuum seal.

Mail shipment is available from Distinctive Products Co., 9017 Cottage Grove, Chicago. The postpaid price for two 5½-ounce jars is $2. (15 cents extra for shipments to points west of Denver.)

A tasting session just completed on Continental's Petits Fours Parisiens voted these irresistible chocolate-covered confections the most luscious petits fours this side of gay Paree. Amid ooh's and ah's, a scramble for seconds and even thirds became the order of the tasting. If and when you do your own tasting, you'll understand why. The inch-square cubes are covered with unusual chocolate that has the richness of a milk chocolate without cloying sweetness. Inside are multi-layers of yellow and chocolate cake between which are sandwiched rich fillings containing such things as marzipan, fruit jelly, ground filberts and almonds. Four varieties of cake combinations and fillings are included in the 40 petits fours contained in the 20-ounce box and each chocolate covered cube is decoratively enhanced with colored icing.

Mail orders for these petits fours can be directed to Charles & Co., 340 Madison Ave., New York. Their postpaid price is $3.35.

For new taste interest in preparing pork spareribs or boneless pork, I highly commend to you Chasu Chinese Barbecue Sauce. It's a pre-roasting marinade formulated for preparing Chinese sweet pork or spareribs barbecued in true Chinese manner. With boneless pork you cut meat into inch-thick strips and get a crisp-coated, roasted result. Honey is skillfully combined with soy sauce, Oriental spices and flavorings, and licorice gives the exotic blend a smoky pungence. Chasu sauce is available from Mid-Pacific Products, P. O. Box 84, Cathedral Station, New York, N. Y., at $1.25 for 8 bottles.

Holiday use of extra-fancy delicacies for entertaining and gifts makes this a pertinent time to throw a spotlight on Kettle Cove's luscious Chocolate Elegante. This unusual chocolate product is like a French pot-de-crème: very rich fudge-like in taste and velvety in consistency. Used as it comes out of the jar, it can be spread on crackers or on cakes for a soft frosting, as the French do with pot-de-crème: also delectable used to fill split cupcakes, cream puffs, éclairs or meringue shells. For parfaits, you combine Chocolate Elegante with whipped cream: for sauce, you thin it with water or milk to desired consistency. You can make excellent hot chocolate by merely combining hot milk and Chocolate Elegante in ratio of one tablespoon to one cup of milk.

Chocolate Elegante is available in three varieties flavored respectively with rum, Cointreau and crème de menthe; in each instance, the alcoholic content delightfully complements the rich chocolate.

A gift pack of the three varieties in ½-pint jars comes in a lovely re-usable box and this "Very Special Threesome" pack costs $5.60. In a holiday mailing carton, Chocolate Elegante costs $4.50 for 3 jars. An "unspiked" variety is available for $1 per jar.

Mail-order shipment can be had from Kettle Cove Industries, Manchester, Mass. (Prices given do not include mailing cost.)

Holiday cooky-making is just around the corner prompting mention of some interesting books on the subject. One, The Christmas Cookbook by Zella Boutell provides in its lengthy cooky chapter, 25 full-size patterns for cooky tree decorations with detailed instructions on carrying through. Other chapters deal with breads, cakes, puddings and other desserts, punch-bowl fare, candies, relishes and conserves. Price $3.95.

Another book, The Cookie Jar by Josephine Perry, is a collection of some 220 cooky recipes. Half of them are from foreign lands: the other half are regional recipes of our own country. Both groups include numerous traditional Christmas specialties. Price $2.85.

Holiday Goodies and How to Make Them, Peter Pauper Press, includes recipes for cookies and sweets to hang on the tree, candy, glazed fruits and nuts, pastry and pies, conserves and frozen desserts. Each chapter is humorously augmented with delightful color illustrations and limericks, and the whole thing is put together with great flair in a 4″ x 7″ book packed in a box illustrated with a reproduction of the book's beguiling cover.

It's an intriguing book for gift-giving, as are three similar books by Peter Pauper Press: Holiday Punches . . . Party Bowls and Soft Drinks, The Holiday Cook Book of Oldtime Cookerie, The Holiday Drink Book. It's a foursome sure to ring a bell with anyone who collects cookbooks as a hobby.

The books cost $2 each in the gift box; $1 each minus the box. The Peter Pauper books and the other two books are available by mail from Brentano's, 586 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y. (15¢ postage for any individual book or for the Pauper foursome.)

How to leave home and like it

By MARION GOUGH

Just on the off chance that the now officially jolly Soviet Union may one day soon pull up the curtain and invite us all to come visiting again, we have lately been considering the study of Russian. This has naturally led us into some research on what are currently the easiest, fastest ways to learn any language—or at least enough of the language so that we can talk back to the natives. (We have discovered that there's no trick to memorizing flashy phrases, nor even to getting them understood. The trouble is that the natives may reply, with their usual exasperating fluency, and then where are you?)

Short of "living with a family" or taking classroom courses in languages, there are three fairly painless methods that seem pretty recommendable to prospective travelers. They will hardly qualify you to read Dante, Dumas or Dostoievski in the original, but they may keep you from going hungry, missing a train or barging into a room of the wrong gender. Chiefly, they provide you with one sort of common ground on which to get acquainted with people in other lands, especially outside of the large cities, where English begins to be a novelty.

FRANK LLOYD WRIGHT'S CONTRIBUTION:

A Beauty of Life equal to the Great Concept of America

Living-dining room of Taliesin, pastoral summer home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lloyd Wright and the Taliesin Fellowship. 1911-1914-1925.

The meaning and message of America to the world is written in the lives of our people. It has been expressed by our still-ringing Declaration of the dignity and worth of the individual. of his right to a beautiful life wherever his pursuit of happiness will take him.

And now. at last, America has found a framework equal to the greatness of its concept in the architecture of Frank Lloyd Wright. in the work he has done with such integrity, beauty and freedom all the long, dedicated years of his life.

From the prairies of the Middle West, where he was born and where he built the home we see on these pages, out to the deserts. woodlands, mountains and coasts. he has created hundreds—and inspired thousands—of other homes that speak eloquently of the continent (Please turn the page) that is our country. He has shown Americans how to love America by living in touch with its varied beauties in homes that partake directly of them, that are designed to grace their lovely sites by accepting their natural gifts. He has shown Americans how to build according to the character of their land and themselves, as in his own desert camp in Arizona, which is spread in all its splendor before us. He has shown Americans how to match the new sense of man's inner spaciousness, of the inner grandeur and nobility which mark the people of a democracy, with buildings and ways of life that are worthy of it and strongly encourage it.

"In America," Frank Lloyd Wright has reminded us again and again, "each man has a peculiar, inalienable right to live in his own house in his own way. He is a pioneer in (Please turn the page) every right sense of the word. His home environment may face forward, may portray his character, tastes and ideas, if he has any—and every man has some somewhere about him." And when it does, we shall be "miles along the road toward the realization of perhaps the greatest architecture, and probably the grandest expression of human life, the world has ever seen. . . . For there is a new integrity in America, alive and working with new means, working for freedom and beauty—yours and mine and our children's—in the realm of the new architecture."

As free men we can no more imitate the styles of other times in our homes than we can copy the lives and thoughts of other men. We must continue to develop new forms—new space concepts—equal to the new ideas of life we have set stirring in the world. That is the meaning of Frank Lloyd Wright.

Frank Lloyd Wright: the man who liberated architecture

By Joseph A. Barry

How quickly we forget the recent past.
How easily we take the present for granted.
Only yesterday heavy cornices and gloomy pseudo-historic styles hung over the homes of America and closed in the American dream of freedom and spaciousness.

And if, today, architects feel free to design bright new homes that embrace their sites with sensitive love, that serve their owners with fidelity and function, that express the advances of our time with beauty and character, then it is largely due to the man whose sixty years of passionate and principled effort freed their architectural thinking and prepared three generations for their work.

We refer, of course, to Frank Lloyd Wright.

How simple—and how insufficient—it would be to list his innovations and show how they have been introduced into our building: earth-hugging houses with wide protective roofs: protected openness to the outdoors: functional and spacious openness of dining to living room, and kitchen to both: built-in heating, and carports. We might even venture fruitlessly into argument as to whether he was really the first to create these new elements or simply the first to pioneer them and make them widely effective.

None of this matters. Because none of this touches the core or opens our eyes to the central meaning of it all: Here is a new architecture for a new world.

These are the questions we must resolve:

What explains the event of Frank Lloyd Wright, perhaps the greatest architect in 500 years?

Why was it America that produced him, and, with him, probably the greatest domestic architecture in the history of the homes of man?

And why do we even dare to speak in such superlatives as "greatest architect" and "greatest architecture"?

We might start with the Declaration of Independence and say that 125 years later America finally achieved an architecture for man's right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

We might start with the birth of a boy in rural Wisconsin, in 1869, son of a Welsh mother, who destined him at birth to build beautiful buildings.

But let us start our story in the 1880's, when Frank Lloyd Wright was sixteen and had two experiences that are as vivid to him today as they were then. They occurred, of course, to hundreds of other boys. He, however, was ready for them.

First, he read Victor Hugo's Notre Dame. Nothing startling here. It was a very popular novel in the Eighties: and we have had at least two movies made from it in our own time called The Hunchback of Notre Dame.

The sixteen-year-old Wright, however, did not skip the long chapter on architecture, as most of us might have—a chapter so heavy that many editions don't even include it. He still remembers passages from it so well that they have become part of his own speeches and thought.

Architecture, he read, had once been the noblest expression of humanity, until it was overthrown by the invention of printing and betrayed by the Italian Renaissance. From the Sixteenth Century its decline was clearly visible. The great Gothic cathedrals of Notre Dame and Chartres, genuine and modern structures in their period, gave way to imitations of Greek and Roman styles. "It was this decadence of architecture." Victor Hugo then (Please turn the page)

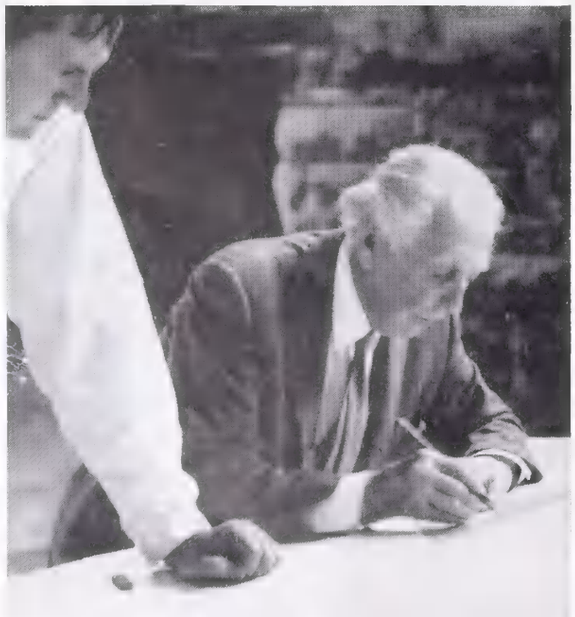
commented bitterly, "which has been called the Renaissance —that setting sun which we all mistook for the dawn."

Perhaps it was within a few weeks' time that young Wright had his second unforgettable experience: He was passing the Wisconsin State Capitol at Madison when he witnessed the collapse of its new west wing. "I heard the roar of collapse," he recalls today, "I saw the clouds of white lime-dust rise high in the air, heard the groans and cries of those injured and not killed—some 40 workmen dead or seriously hurt. I remember clinging to the iron palings of the park in full view of the scene, sick with horror.



"A great 'classic' cornice had been projecting boldly out from the top of the building against the sky. Its moorings partly torn away, this cornice now hung down, suspended on end, one great section hanging above an upper window, where a workman hung, head downward, his foot caught, crushed on the sill of this window by a falling beam. A red line streaked the stone wall below him and it seemed as though the hanging box of sheet-iron, that a moment before had gloomed against the sky as the 'classic' cornice, must tear loose by its own weight and cut him down before he could be rescued.

"The spectacle of that sham feature hanging there, deadly menace to the pitifully moaning figure of a working man, went far to deepen the dismay planted in a boy's heart by Victor Hugo's prophetic tale and gave rise to reflections: 'This empty sheet-iron thing . . . a little while ago it was pretending to be stone . . . was it all now sham or was it just the cornice? . . . and if they would lie about the cornice, why wouldn't they lie about other parts of the building too?"

"That was early disillusionment and cruel," Mr. Wright concludes, "the vision of idolized architecture ebbing slowly away into sham. But both experiences—reading Victor Hugo and seeing the wreck of the Capitol by internal collapse—did something to me for which I have never ceased to be grateful. If the old order is to be preserved, it is not well to have boys read the great poets or see classic buildings fall down."

Four years later, years that included the study of engineering and some practice of it. the study of architecture and considerable drafting of it (in the offices of the fashionable Silsbee). young Wright went to Louis H. Sullivan. because. for one thing. "he did not believe in cornices."

Some six or seven years later he left on his own to be forever on his own. and to complete. with Richardson and Sullivan. the trinity who performed the transition from 19th-century to 20th-century architecture. from cornice-hung structures glooming against the sky to buildings that are part of the landscape and companions to the horizon—whatever the landscape. wherever the horizon.

America. when Wright first began to practice as an independent architect. was at various levels of development. It had had its golden day in literature. in the works of Whitman. Melville. Emerson. Thoreau—all writers who had nourished Wright's spirit. But it had settled down. in the words of Lewis Mumford. into the brown decades of home life. Mid-Victorianism had descended on America like a blanket of fall leaves.

Remember our manners? They were as stuffy as our puffed sleeves. our bustles—equivalents of the fake-stone cornices. the pilasters. the solemn Greek pillars that held up nothing. barely their own weight. Remember the bathing suits? They were as much an obstacle between the sky. the air. the water and ourselves. as ever our homes were.

We were not Americans: we were little Englishmen and little French women. Most of us. that is. A few were not. and some of those few came to Frank Lloyd Wright: the Winslows. the Littles. the Danas. the Coonleys (you can see their great houses on pages 272-277). "One man in a hundred thousand will need me." Wright said. "as much as I need him."

They did need him. and they were wise enough to know it. He was probably not easy to work with—creating new structural forms for a new country can be as painful as childbirth—no layman could possibly envisage the reality of his visionary projects. It must have been as difficult as reading the future. particularly since their present was clouded over with the classic fog of the Chicago World's Fair of 1893. whose monumental aftermath virtually blotted Sullivan and contemporary architecture from the American scene.

But they went to him—and much credit to them for it—when he was young and beginning. despite the honest arrogance he had chosen as a defense of his revolutionary principles. rather than a hypocritical humility to support himself and his growing family. Slowly he acquired the clients he deserved. the great clients that result in great houses. One by one his prairie houses. as he called them. rose out of the ground. into the light of day: and soon he had a host of imitators who were rapidly making a school out of his work without seeming to understand the principles behind it.

Not only in America. but in Europe as well. Wright's forms were being copied without the principles themselves being either understood or even vaguely applied. Far from being without honor in his own country. an entire issue of the American "Architectural Record" was devoted to his work in 1908. before he had reached forty. In 1910. the famous Wasmuth edition of his buildings appeared in Germany and rapidly spread his influence throughout Europe.

But only today might one say Frank Lloyd Wright has triumphed. in the sense that his architectural philosophy has become a major part of our living culture. a fundamental part of the equipment with which our architects and builders solve the important problem of architecture for ways of life new to the world.

Only today might one say America has an architecture equal to its unique message. because America. at last. understands what that architecture must be. Mr. Wright has triumphed. We can not say it too often. This issue of our magazine. which we are devoting not simply to his great buildings. but to his greater principles. is testimony to it: and even if it has arrived late in his life at eighty-six. happily. it is not too late.

If we can state these principles in our fashion. in as clear and plain a way as we are capable. perhaps Mr. Wright himself will see his triumph in our recognition of it.

Let us try.

1. Man. every man. has a right to a life of beauty. privacy and noble spaciousness. That is the meaning of the American Declaration. So let us have an architecture that is adequate to it. Which means a new (Please turn the page) Always by his side and deep in his life and work is Olgivanna, his wife.

architecture. Away with fake façades, false styles, all impositions on the freedom and honest expression of the individual and his home. Which means abolishing the little boxes, the small cubicles, the cell-like spaces that have come about with the imitation of possibly once-valid styles, the reduction of formerly fashionable mansions and manors to the average-size houses of today. Let the inner spaciousness of man be matched by a sense of spaciousness in his home. Let his house no longer be a box that confines, but rather one that opens to light, sky and nature, without ever losing its quality of being a shelter and a place of withdrawal.

It follows, then, that architecture is not a matter of four walls and a roof, designed to impress visitors or passers-by. It is the space to be lived in! It is the space that surrounds us, that joins the space within ourselves encouraging us to expand with it. It is the space that gives us privacy and refuge, as well as stimulation and excitement. And it is this space that must determine the outward forms of our houses, not vice versa.

2. Man is part of nature. So long as he maintains a wholesome contact with the natural world he will be healthy in mind and body, as will be his culture. To deny this is to create an artificial civilization productive of jitters, neuroses, passive entertainment and boxed-in lives piled on boxed-in lives.

Therefore, let us build houses that restore to man the life-giving, life-enhancing elements of nature. This means an architecture that begins with the nature of the site. Which means taking the first great step toward assuring a worthy architecture, for in the rightness of a house on the land we sense a fitness we call beauty.

3. The new world has produced new machines and new materials. Let us use them for new forms, new space concepts for our new ways of life. The new machine age has given us the greatest tool box in history—let us use it for the greatest architecture, the greatest human expression the world has ever known, with man—and never the machine—as the dramatic center. Let us use steel to span larger living spaces, create continuity and plasticity in our structures. Let us use glass to explode forever the architectural box, to liberate our vision and extend it to the ends of the earth, to remove corners from our spirit as from our homes.

And let us understand the nature of all materials as we would understand the nature of humanity, and the nature of nature itself. Let plaster be plaster and not fake marble, lest it fail us, as we, pretending to be what we are not, fail ourselves. So let brick be brick, wood, wood and stone, stone. We shall be creating an architecture and a culture with integrity, wholeness, and beauty, for, as we admire a house that suits its site, so shall we instinctively recognize as beautiful the fitness of a material to its purpose.

4. Architecture is the mother of all the arts.

Let the structure of our buildings have such form that when revealed it has poetry. Let the ornament and pattern of our houses be an integral part of the architecture, rather than an applied afterthought. Let us eliminate from our homes all that is neither personally useful nor personally beautiful. Let us return to the spirit of the great ages, when all the arts were united to serve and ennoble the daily life, working in harmony together (Please turn to page 326)

Symbolic of the poetry and freedom which he has brought to architecture, this recent project from the drawing pencil of Mr. Wright himself is for the home of son Robert Llewellyn. It grows out of its site on a great mushroom-like base of poured concrete, rising in terraces of standard block over the steep bank of the valley. Its oval rooms offer views in all directions, as can be seen in plans above. Note too how inseparable are the interior spaces from the richness of the exterior forms which they have determined—a major principle in Mr. Wright's architecture.

The Poetry of Structure

The very means by which a building is built are the basis of the grace and beauty of its outward visible form. The rhythm and poetry achieved by organic architecture is the structural lesson of Frank Lloyd Wright

By John de Koven Hill

In some of Frank Lloyd Wright's buildings it is hard to tell where nature stops and man begins. The truth is that nature is present in these buildings as much as it is in the flow of a waterfall, the growth of a plant and the rock formation of a mountain glen.

Looking up at "Falling Water," we might easily compare it to a plant. Like the natural growth all around, its repose is fascinating from any angle, in varying light and shade, and in every detail. Yet the serene countenance of this famous house is in no sense an imitation of natural plant growth. It is, however, the natural expression, in concrete and steel, of the same structural principles that we see in many plant forms. Like the wood fibers that are continuous from tree trunk to branch, the reinforcing steel within these concrete terraces makes them a continuing part of the rock wall in which they are anchored.

Here we see a building that takes its form horizontally instead of vertically into space.

If we could live for a while on these terraces of "Falling Water," we could take in the delight of the tranquil relationship of the sheltered rooms with the stream below, of balconies reaching into the surrounding woods. Walking along the rock ledges we would feel that this beautiful glade is made more enchanting by the presence of the house. It is impossible to imagine that they weren't always together. Yet the beauty of the form we are seeing, which seems as timeless as the boulders around it, is the product of our century.

When he designed "Falling Water" in 1935, Mr. Wright chose a method of construction he hadn't used before in a residence. With reinforced concrete he was able to cantilever broad terraces as extensions of the natural rock ledges. Mr. Wright describes the cantilever action as being similar to the "balance of a tray on a waiter's fingers." Here this engineering principle served as a means of creating generous living space without destroying the charm of the glen with massive understructure. These slabs of man-made rock spread out from along the wall of the glen, held secure from sidewise movement by solid chimneys and piers of stone that rise from the boulders.

Reinforcing steel rods within the floor slabs turn up into the concrete parapets. This turned-up edge forms a strengthening beam at the same time that it acts as a railing. In this way the floor slabs are like a series of trays, anchored in the rock at the back, the rhythmic bands of the parapets echoing the quiet lining of the rock walls along the stream.

The contour of these concrete forms is as simply and directly expressive of their structure as the contour of the hand is expressive of the action of the bones and muscles within. Here we see the familiar beauty of stone masonry—one of man's earliest building materials—coupled with a new form of beauty, which lies in the plastic nature of reinforced concrete.

Because the cantilevered floors are self-supporting, vertical walls are only curtains of glass held in a frame of light and delicate metalwork. This element of steel, with predominantly horizontal members, interweaves a rhythmic, sympathetic motif among the stone masses below the cantilevered slabs.

Deceptively simple in appearance, this house, like any organic structure, is extremely complex in its integration of one part to another—all the elements being conceived as working together in a three-dimensional sense.

We lack a word in English for what Mr. Wright calls the "habit-pattern" of a structure—"the procedure from root to stem, from stem to leaf to bud to blossom to fruit—what it is, say, that makes the pine tree a pine as distinguished from a cherry tree or an oak."

It is this insight into appropriateness and organic rightness, which has become an intuitive engineering sense, that we marvel at in whatever he builds. It enables him to perceive the structural qualities and capabilities in all materials, new or old, and to present them not only in new and and more practical forms, but as new expressions of beauty. (Please turn to page 348)

The designer of a fine house considers not only the beauty of the site, but also how best to open its beauty to the people within, as here in the living room of the home opposite.

The Character of the Site is the Beginning of Architecture

To design and build a house that is at ease with the land on which it will stand is to take the first giant step toward creating architectural beauty and establishing harmony between man and his natural environment.

Such is the essential meaning of the pictures on these two pages.

All fine houses begin with a fine, close study of the site: What kind of structure would be most suitable to it, and how best to open its special beauties to the people within, so they might fully enjoy the land they have chosen.

A particularly happy resolution of both aims can be seen in the house at the top of our spread. The interior is directly above: the exterior, opposite (in color), shows the house high on a bluff overlooking a great river. They should be studied together, for they were planned together by Frank Lloyd Wright.

If there is an element of mystery in the creative process of his genius, there is not, at least, any intentional secret on his part. Repeatedly Mr. Wright has reminded us, "The character of the site is the beginning of the building that aspires to architecture."

Once we understand this, we can understand how he has designed hundreds of buildings with so little repetition and such freshness of form.

For it is in the uniqueness of a site overlooking a lake, of a stretch of gentle hills and farmland, or of a rocky piece of land stepping down to a river, that an architect, sensitive to the site, finds inspiration for the design of each house that is to rise from it.

The design should vary with the assets and deficits of the ground: A sharp slope calls for a different solution from a flat city lot; a desert and a woodland cannot be satisfied by the same kind of house—nor can the people who live in such diverse regions.

Designed thus, a house invariably looks like no other, yet graces its site as if it had always been there and is inseparable from it. Test this for yourself. Try moving any of these houses to another site. It can be done, but in every case some violence (Please turn to page 292)

The Eloquence of Materials

By Robert Mosher

Every material has its own eloquent message, its own lyrical song, and no one has made them sing so beautifully as Frank Lloyd Wright. To design in the nature of each material, to let each express itself is a major principle in his philosophy.

Brick, wood and stone, for him, are sources of integral enrichment as well as structural materials. The baked clay of brick, the golden grain of wood, the soft texture of stone are like colors for his palette.

Even greater than his sensitivity to their special quality is his engineering knowledge of their possibilities, particularly of glass and steel. Had the latter existed in former times, Mr. Wright reminds us, the history of architecture would have been different: and we would not be arguing modern versus traditional.

It was primarily due to his grasp of the nature of steel and glass that Mr. Wright succeeded, once and for all, in exploding the box-like rooms of conventional architecture. Because of its steel supporting members and the "nothingness" of its protected glass walls, the house directly above opens out to include the vastness of the sea as part of its interior living space. Steel and glass combine here with a broad, covering roof to create a sense of shelter while allowing the glory of the seaward site to enter.

Such is the nature of materials in the hands of an architect who unites in himself artist and engineer. He is aware not only of the advantages of a modern material (such as glass), but he is also fully conscious of its limitations (when unshaded, glass-walled rooms can be torture chambers of heat or cold). Consequently, he can use a material with its natural eloquence—plaster as plaster, not as stone—exploiting plasticity and texture as in the ceiling of the Mossberg home (opposite, above). (Please turn the page)

Never has concrete block been used with more beauty than by Mr. Wright, who has here impressed

HOME OF LLOYD LEWIS, LIBERTYVILLE, ILLINOIS

The beauty of this room is inherent in the warm, textured character of brick and wood—each used according to its own nature and with a pattern that is integral with the structure. 1940.

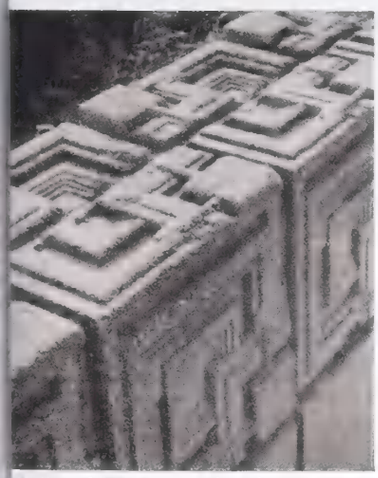
"When we perceive a thing to be beautiful," Mr. Wright says, "it is because we instinctively recognize the rightness of the thing."



It is this rightness of wood used as wood, stone as stone, brick as brick, that we have seen in the homes on the previous pages.

Here, to the left, we have one of the most glowing of Mr. Wright's creations, the Ennis house. Its beauty is purely a product of his sense of the possibilities of cast concrete block when it is not cast in an ordinary mold but in one that gives it a brocade-like pattern that comes out of its plastic nature and method of manufacture.

At the same time, the blocks are laid so there is a flowing continuity, an esthetic plasticity, that creates great interior spaces accompanied by the patterned rhythm of the blocks themselves, thus resulting in an extraordinary oneness of ornament and structure. And all with a concrete block, one of the most underestimated building materials especially for interior finish. Mr. Wright was the first to see and use the beauty of such a readily available building material, and the first to bring out its special quality.

With wood, as with concrete, steel or glass, Mr. Wright is supremely expressive and underlines its warm, living nature. For wood, above all the others, is a true product of nature. Its grain and color seem to touch our emotions like no other material.

But wood must be understood and its physical characteristics exploited. If it is bent or cut unnaturally, it will not reflect its true inherent beauty. The ceiling in the house above speaks to us of the warmth of wood, its grain, (Please turn to page 317)

The Reality of a House is the Space Within Space within should determine exterior form.

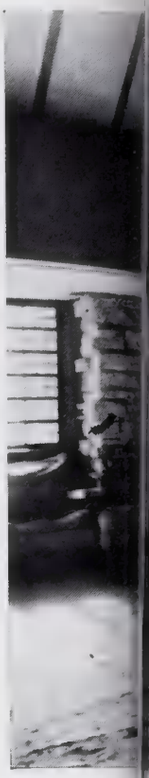
"What is the significance of the Guggenheim Museum?" [a Frank Lloyd Wright project for New York City, sketch at left]. I asked Mr. Wright in 1946 during a long discussion in which I took the part of the devil's advocate in order to stimulate him to talk. "This Museum," he replied, "will be a great building. For the first time in the history of architecture we will have broken the habit of building thus and so."—these words were accompanied by a gesture in which one hand was placed above the other, then the lower one withdrawn and placed above to symbolize the floors of a house, one over the other, inert and discontinuous—"and we will have a work which is continuously this."—the last word, pronounced slowly, was accompanied by an ascending spiral motion of the hand signifying continuous space, flowing, freed of any rigid concept of volume.



The esthetic judgment of his buildings apart, Wright's exceptional merit is in posing the problem of space as the fundamental problem of his work. Every building can be analyzed schematically into void, volume—that is, the box of walls that encloses the void—and decoration. All three factors are essential in a work of architecture, but the internal space, the void, takes the role of protagonist: it is the substance of architecture. The volume and the decorative elements, unless organically connected with the internal space and almost derived from it, become merely sculptural, plastic, two-dimensional or three-dimensional, but are never spatial in the architectonic meaning of the word.

The story of modern architecture is the story of modern structural techniques, modern social theories, modern taste. But, more specifically, it is also the story of a new concept of continuous space. Wright's passion for building is (Please turn the page)

The reality of architecture is not in its exterior forms, in its walls and roofs, but in the space enclosed, within which man walks and lives. Such was the great discovery of Frank Lloyd Wright. Out of this new concept he created a new architecture, as a European critic and architect here explains

"Like poetry, a sense of architecture is the sound of the 'within.' We might call that 'within' the heart. Architecture now becomes integral, the expression of a new-old reality: the livable interior space of the room itself. The room must be seen as architecture, or we have no architecture. We have no longer an outside as outside. Now the outside may come inside, and the inside may and does go outside. They are of each other."

well-known, and his position in regard to social problems as they relate to architecture has been made clear through his writings and speeches; here, therefore, we may dwell on his conquest of space, since it is in this that the tendency of organic architecture finds its real justification. Organic architecture, and modern architecture in general, would have no reason to exist, any more than have the infinitude of "modernistic" examples that plague our new suburbs, were it not based on a spatial concept—that of continuous space.

How was this concept born? First of all, from social considerations; second, at least as regards its formulation, from psychological insight. "Architecture for the people," "everyman's home," are the quasi-sacred phrases we hear repeated ad nauseam and which have an historic significance. The work of contemporary architects is focused on houses for the middle-class family and the worker with as much intensity as was once devoted to public and monumental buildings. Given this program, how can it be resolved in terms of architecture?

The ordinary house today, whether built by civic authorities or by corporations, does not even contemplate the problem. The nineteenth-century suburban villa took a grandiose edifice and reduced it in scale. The imposing salon shriveled into a tiny sitting-room; the monumental hall was reduced to a minuscule vestibule arteriosclerotic in its congestion; the windows became peepholes, the pediments, little triangles. Once the relation between human dimension and the building scale was changed, the house became a parody of the palace.

Current pseudo-modern architecture, by shaving off superficial decoration, has revealed in its nudity the spatial bankruptcy of the traditional house. We live in cubicles that open on either hand into other cubicles, while above and below are still more cubicles. The smaller the house, the more suffocating the cubicles. The juxtaposition of rooms, each geometrically autonomous, could be legitimate if these rooms were monumental or at least sufficiently large to allow men to breathe; reduced in scale, they entail moral degradation and the sense of imprisonment between four inert walls, nameless and isolated.

To bring to the homes of workers or the middle classes some of the amplitude, dignity and freedom of the great architecture of history has been (and still is) the intent of all the modern movement, whether functional or organic. In this sociological quest, Wright is historically at both the point of departure and the point of arrival, as the Prairie Houses and the Usonians document. (See the Usonian exhibition house shown on pages 264-269.)

It is psychological motive that differentiates the organic trend of today from the rational architecture of about 20 years ago, without opposing one to the other. Rationalism was rational and scientific especially with regard to social considerations, utilitarian requirements and technical construction. The organic movement, a kind of second functionalism, is functional in these respects and also psychological. More precisely, it is not technically functional in rela- (Please turn to page 373)

In his living-dining room at Taliesin, Wisconsin, Mr. Wright achieves the drama of a low-ceilinged entry opening into a soaring, cathedral-like space—a typical Wrightian device.

Changes in ceiling levels, overhanging balconies and upper clerestory windows, all combine to create varieties of interior living spaces at Taliesin, as in other Wright houses.

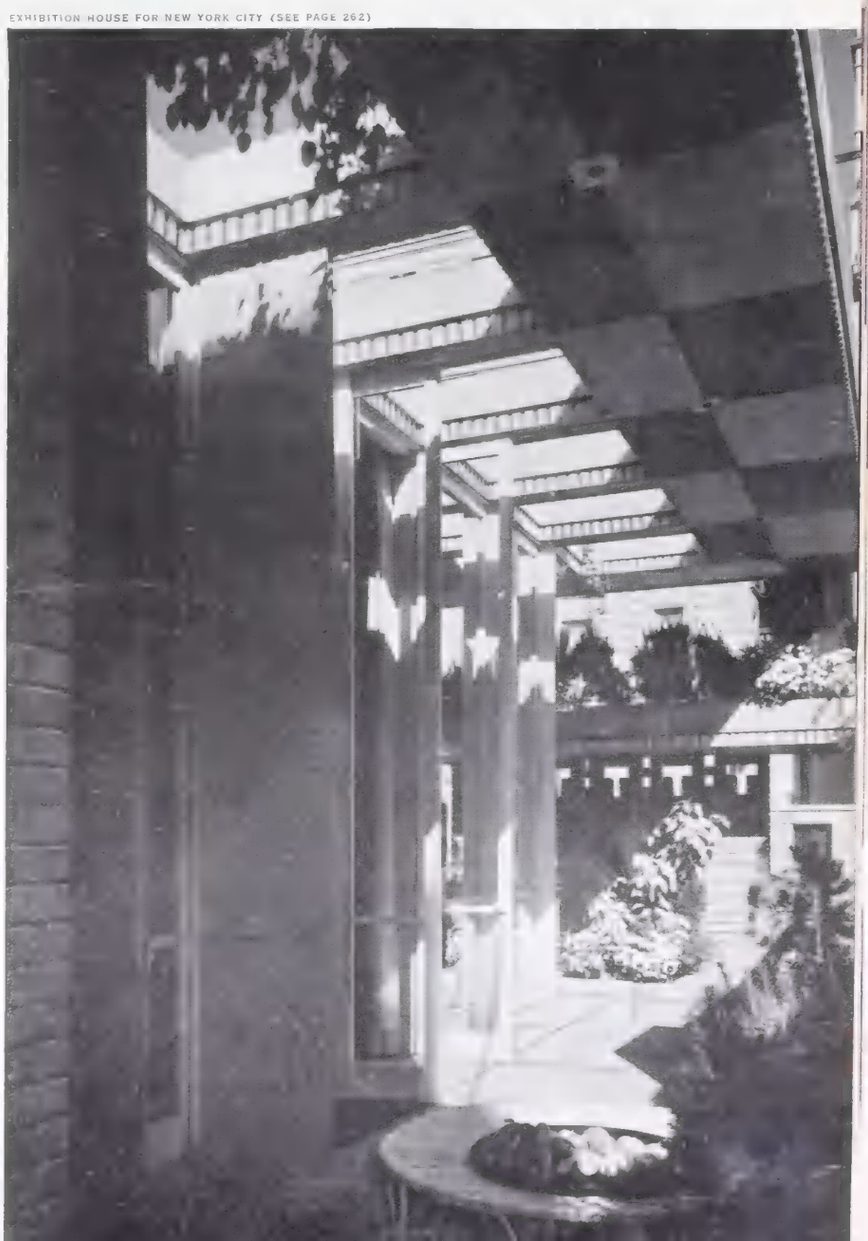
Handsome Oriental jars, carved wooden panels, pieces of sculpture accompany your walk in the gardens and in the house.



There is a quiet and lovely story of enrichment to be told about the homes of Frank Lloyd Wright. It is the story of small objects, personal possessions, beautiful and useful items in the daily life—copper kitchen pots and gleaming tableware, fine floor coverings and equally fine table linen. It is the story of the art of homemaking, which makes a house into a home that is, in itself, a work of art.

We have already seen in the buildings of Mr. Wright a basic enrichment which is in the character of the architecture, in the poetry of its structure, in the forms and rhythms of its construction. We have seen the added enrichment of his ornament, which is integral with the architecture, inherent in the nature of the materials used, inside and out, in the garden as in the house.

Steadily and consistently, we have stressed the beauty of good architecture as fundamental to the beauty of any home. At the right, it is symbolized by the melodic shadows created by the pierced overhang of Mr. Wright's Exhibition House for New York City. Above and at the left, we show the integration of handsome Oriental jars, carved panels and sculpted or molded figures with the architecture of his Taliesin house and garden, which are one and inseparable in plan.

Now it is time to talk about the enrichment brought to a home by the more humble (Please turn the page)

The art of a house is shown in the play of light and shade created by its design.

Because the everyday useful objects in Wright's homes are chosen for their beauty, they are not put away behind cupboard doors, but stand out always in view, to be recomposed into new groupings and arrangements after every use. The setting of a tea tray is given the same thoughtful attention as a flower arrangement. Notice how flowers in center of table (opposite) seem part of the vertical arrangement in corner near table.

objects of the daily life, for Mr. Wright brings to these objects the same sensitivity to form, color and texture that distinguishes his superb buildings.

Even at breakfast! He describes a Taliesin breakfast in his Autobiography and we come closer to him, perhaps, than at any other time: here, he is one of us:

"Let's sit down in comfort," he writes, "to a widespread, tastefully set low table, ample cloth of Chinese linen fancifully colored and great big napkins to match, big enough to tuck into the neckband and spread all over whatever it is you wear for breakfast.

"The table decorations this morning? By Herbert. Unusually good. A big shallow glass platter brimming with clear water; anemones nestling in a big branch of fernbrake held up by a curious yellow-moss-covered stone set in the water.

"A few fresh strawberry leaves laid over them, here comes a heap of Taliesin strawberries in a big Chinese Celadon bowl. The strawberries are lovely on the cool pale-green of the bowl . . . (Continued overleaf)

Mr. Wright picks objects such as these to furnish his own and his clients' homes. He buys them from artist-craftsmen through shops like America House and V. C. Morris. He likes the glitter of gold: "Lurex" in fabrics, gold leaf on Japanese screens and Burmese lacquer. He likes wooden bowls and platters when the wood-grain enriches both form and shape. He likes basketry—Victorian, American Indian, modern Italian or Japanese. This table setting in Wright's home uses Spode in a Chinese pattern, gold-glittering Dirilyte flatware and fragile, flower-shaped, Baccarat stemmed goblets.

"Arranging the table for dining is a great artistic opportunity."

Here comes Billy with a wide old Celadon platter of fine asparagus, freshly cut. You cannot fail to observe how the color of the asparagus agrees with Celadon . . .

"As he begins to do the talking, Alec (Woollcott) continues to sit with his hand on the handle of a special coffee pot we have set beside him (no, the pot is not Celadon nor is it distinguished), pouring out a fresh cup now and then." And so Mr. Wright goes on with the story of that breakfast, commenting about the service, the honey (hot), the toast (one side only, please).

We tell it to reveal the completeness of a man who can think in terms of something as grand as the Hollyhock House to our left, and as small and human as toast and coffee and the napkin he tucks under his chin.

Other than his genius, perhaps the most impressive characteristic of Frank Lloyd Wright is his integrity, in the sense, here, of his life-long pursuit of the integration of every aspect of existence: architecture with culture, beauty with truth and function, everything with the daily 24 hours of life. With clarity and precision Wright's plan for the Exhibition House repeats the principles he's followed for six decades: The new family deserves a new kind of house in which back and front disappear, all rooms are equally handsome, equally comfortable and with a new sense of flowing spaciousness.

The houses shown on these pages commemorate Mr. Wright's 60 years of continuous work in the residential field. To grasp the full measure of his accomplishment here, a little history is necessary, for his work was begun before many of us were born. We have grown up in a world he did much to create. Thus, like motor-age children who never even saw a horse and buggy, it takes real effort to conceive of what the house was like before Frank Lloyd Wright took it in hand.

When he began his architectural practice in Chicago in the early 1890's, a basic change had already occurred in American life. The old, self-sufficient family which produced most of the food it consumed, the clothes it wore, the furniture it lived with, the very house that sheltered it—this family and this way of life were already on their way out. In its place was appearing a new kind of family of consumers which instead of producing what it ate and wore, bought it from the stores with earned wages.

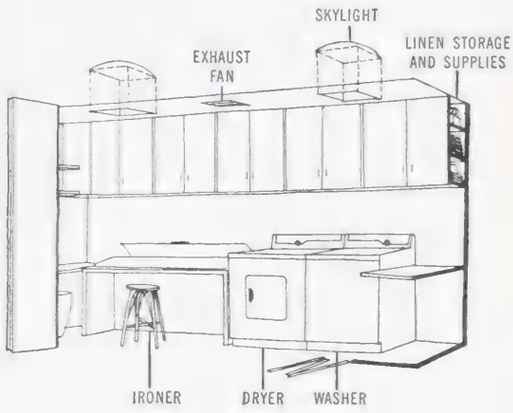
Today, beset with contemporary problems, we may tend to regret this change. We look back with a rosy nostalgia not very firmly bedded in fact. Today, the words "homemade" and "handmade" are terms of praise, trade-marks of chic. We forget that, 50 or 75 years ago, these same words were terms of disparagement, of reproach or contempt. Now there were doubtless real merits to home-baked bread, home-cured meats, hand-woven cloth; but the hard and often noisome labor connected with their preparation was not one of them. Here we must take the word of our own grandmothers who had to do (Please turn the page)

While sheltered from the world at large, as in this house, Wright's bedrooms have always been charmingly related to their own little private landscapes of terrace and garden.

For Mr. Wright there is no "common" or "ugly" material; all are beautiful if used with respect for inherent qualities.

Pierced roof overhang and garden wall show what richness lies in plywood and brick when handled well.

Technology made the kitchen clean, convenient, comfortable. Wright made it beautiful as well. For the servantless housewife, he opened the kitchen to make it an integral part of the house so that she would not be exiled from family life. Here is his current version of the living-room-kitchen.



No element is too prosaic to escape his creative touch. Here, bedroom hall has as much as 34 ft. of storage wall.

this work and only too gladly gave it up. To our grandmothers, housework meant the stupefying heat of the kitchen on a July day, the depressing labor at the washtub, the smell and flies from the chicken pen. The fact was that most homes were little factories and most wives were slaves to a sweatshop schedule. Under such conditions, most houses were uncomfortable to live in, unbeautiful to look at.

Here again we must take the testimony of the women. Why do you suppose they labored so hard to create front yards, front doors, front rooms if not to conceal the ugliness of the rear? Why this effort to create little islands of peace and beauty if not for occasional escape from the grinding routine of pre-industrial housekeeping? For those women, cleanliness meant a constant struggle; comfort they sometimes won, beauty almost never. (Please turn to page 367)

Equally impatient with "period" paneling or antiseptic white enamel, Wright's bathrooms are always direct, functional. Main bath and lavatory show typical Wrightian elegance and utilitarian convenience.

Faith in your own Individuality

By FRANK LLOYD WRIGHT

Taking a collection of sea shells as his theme, Frank Lloyd Wright recently delivered one of the most glowing of his Sunday morning talks, as is his wont, to the architectural apprentices of the Taliesin Fellowship. We reprint it here virtually as it was recorded.

This morning, boys, I want to give you a little lesson in housing. I will show you what housing amounts to in nature, and what a good place nature is to go to if you really want to study housing.

Look carefully at these hundreds of beautiful, infinitely various little houses (Mr. Wright shows the apprentices a tray full of sea shells). Here you see housing on a lower level, it is true, but isn't this humble instance a marvelous manifestation of life? Now, where, in all this bewildering variety of form, is the idea? Is there not just one idea or principle here? But where is the limitation to variety? There is none.

Speaking of human housing, here is a good lesson that you young architects may now get. If the human mind is so limited that it can take in only some special one (pointing to one shell), what we now need to see is that we must inform ourselves, if we really want to develop a culture of our own, so that we can perform similar "miracles" (pointing to them all) in order that we do not have to submit to those impositions by code or formula, in the name of science or authority, which impose a living death on our performances.

Here, in these shells, we see the housing of the life of the sea. It is the housing of a lower order of life, but it is a housing with exactly what we lack: inspired form. In this collection of houses of hundreds of small beings, who themselves built these houses, we see a quality which we might call invention. The beauty of their variation is never finished. Creation here goes on forever. It is not a question of degree, but of principle of design. This multitudinous expression indicates what design can mean.

There is no reason why our buildings and the housing of human beings, which we so stupidly perpetrate all alike as two peas in a pod, shouldn't be quite as fertile in imaginative resource as these little sea shells. Why do we ever take to any one formula, carry it out to a dead end, and execute it as though that were all? Here in this collection of little houses is one of the best lessons you could possibly find. Study them.

There is but one generic principle here: All these little shell-houses are doing the same thing, but not in the same way. This one (a clam shell) is based on the opening and shutting of the house. Two halves hinged together. These and many others without hinges—are they of a higher development, or, being less mechanical, are they inferior? Or the reverse? Can you see how all these lines and forms in all these colors and textures are tributary to the forces which are being exerted from within as the shell is being made, or, we might say, designed?

Every ornamentation, that is to say, every pattern, you see here, and the exquisite forms of the shells themselves, are tributary to the force that is being exerted by its like upon itself from within, as the growing shell is being made. Probably this one grew in coral beds, where the very shape and decoration of the thing was a feature of the preservation of its life, keeping its inhabitant from destruction by alien forces. That was true generally of these more exclusive cellular shells.

Look at this fantasy! (Mr. Wright holds up a striking shell). Here is an original! All these infinitely variable forms are saying exactly the same thing. No interior change in idea, yet here is another and another and another individual. Here you may see what individuality might mean in a democracy. If you want a lesson in organic structure and decoration, here it is. And what colorations, what beautiful, textured color! Always, in these forms, in these little poems, there is the ebb and the flow, the plasticity of the elements by way of which, and in which, they came to exist. They are natural, you see. These little things are all of them lovely in their own way. Beautiful. All of them. Some of them are still young, growing up perhaps, the species still a becoming.

Here, for instance, is a beautiful form of principle at work. Every single one comes to a different conclusion, wherever it may start or whatever the harmony may be. Yet, see the variety of means to ends? When you get the simple secret of this inner life of the thing, why that thing is what it is, and why a certain aim does persist in all these various shells of this or any other type of life, that means you have the secret of differences in a family, differences that mean various races —true dissidence, in other words.

See the great, seemingly utter difference between these two shells! What in common do they have? Here we see reinforced shells, evidently due to a scarcity of raw materials. Here we see the reinforcing rib, instead of the heavier mass, the outer-wall-bearing pattern. The pattern here is seemingly predestined to purpose, since these shells are the children of movement—the movement of the sea and the sand. Why can't we be as fertile in our work? Where should we go to study the inner forces that have such wide consequence?

Look at this one! Probably called a "genius" by the tribe! Imagine all this as housing. These are homes. These are nature-buildings. Shall we call each a different idea, a different principle? No, they are not different. They are all the experience of but one idea. Out of that one idea, which is generic, and so productive, comes (Please turn to page 302)

SHELLS FROM MCARTHUR SHOP, NEW YORK CITY

The Symphonic Poem of a Great House

"What I call integral ornament is founded upon the same organic simplicities as Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, that amazing revolution in tumult and splendor of sound built upon four tones, based upon a rhythm a child could play on the piano with one finger. Supreme imagination reared the four repeated tones, simple rhythms, into a great symphonic poem that is probably the noblest thought-built edifice in our world. And architecture is like music in this capacity for the symphony."

FRANK LLOYD WRIGHT

By Elizabeth Gordon, Editor

Alexander Woollcott said that, if he had to reserve the word genius for but one living American, he would apply it to Frank Lloyd Wright. Similarly, of all the fine homes I have ever seen, I would like to have reserved the word great for the Coonley house, designed by Mr. Wright in 1907 and built in Riverside, Illinois, in 1908.

In all my years of searching for houses worth holding up as examples from which to learn, I have never been so completely satisfied, so completely enchanted (for that is a better word) as with this magnificent house. It is a great work of art, the epitome of shelter. Here, in one residence, art and life come together. Here, form and function are inseparable, and we can see clearly what is meant by the principles of architecture to which Mr. Wright has dedicated himself all his many years.

What gave me the shock of making an important discovery was that this 50-year-old house was as fresh as the finest being built today. It had not the slightest tinge of obsolescence anywhere about it. And it possessed much more than whatever our present optimum standards demand of fine houses. It has a richness of structural beauty which we are just beginning to long for (Continued overleaf)

Three sides of the Coonley living room are windows or French doors. Yet, despite so much glass, the room gives one a sense of shelter and security. Like all the main rooms, it is on the second floor, to gain a view of the Des Plaines River.

Skylight above the staircase (left) that leads to the living room. Lighted by night as well as by day, it is another variation on main musical motif of squares and rectangles.

This was a prototype for almost all of Wright's later living rooms, which are always grandly spacious with a soaring quality in the ceiling lines. There are always vistas to other equally interesting spaces, inviting the eye while still containing you.

House Beautiful chose the Avery Coonley house to typify all the great houses which Mr. Wright designed after the turn of the century—houses so rich in fresh design ideas that designers are still being inspired by them and pursuing points of view which he opened then. The main garden façade (above) might be that of the newest house in California. And the patterned wall of glazed ceramic tile mosaic, laid in inscribed stucco, is beginning to be experimented with only now, in the 1950's, by modern architects.

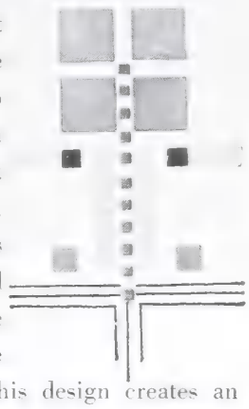
after an era when our own esthetic goals have been shaped primarily by a revolt from the clutter of Victorianism.

So, my fingers were all thumbs as I photographed it with my own 3D camera, and I experienced the heady excitement anyone knows when he discovers, for himself and by himself, a masterpiece.

Mr. Wright had never talked about the Coonley house with me. When I first saw it, I did not know that he considered it the most successful of his houses. I was seeing it, then, as I would any house—judging the kinds and depths of living that could be experienced in the spaces within. I was noting, with mounting excitement, the high degree to which the smallest amenities had been provided for: the way this house had been endowed with palatial luxury: how the spread-out plan separated (from sight and sounds and smells) the service areas from all other areas containing the private and public rooms.

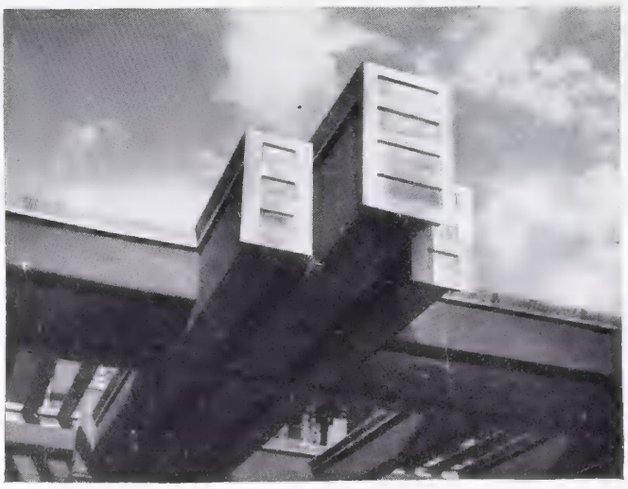


Here was something we look for, but seldom find: a wonderful sense of shelter, reaching out over you and containing you safely and snugly, at the same time letting you look out in all directions. Here was what all good architects strive for: every detail lovingly developed within the rhythm and harmony of the whole, with nothing distracting from the wholeness. Here was variety, but a variety contributing to an intricate and interesting unity. Here were many themes, each developed in several ways but also interlocking with other themes, with the harmonious complexity of a musical symphony. Here was the possibility of living a life where everything is genuine and in accord, where the residents can derive deep and lasting sustenance from the beauty of their surroundings. Here, in short, was a truly great house.

Balcony outside French doors of living room uses still another variation of the motif of squares and rectangles.

A building has a presence, as does a person, that defies a photographer. Since HOUSE BEAUTIFUL grapples daily with this sad truth, we have often noted that the better the house, the harder it is to make its reality "come through" in pictures. To present the Coonley house, even halfway properly, would take a whole issue of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, for it is not only physically extensive, but charged with many moods. It would need to be photographed in many seasons, in many conditions of weather. Documenting it as fully as it deserves, as the architectural monument it is, would be more the proper function of the American Art Index. So our architectural staff has chosen to show you only one aspect: Mr. Wright developed several decorative motifs throughout the building and made them interweave one with the other, playing them like contrapuntal melodies. This is a rare characteristic seldom seen in any house and will explain much about all phases of his designing.

The major theme in the symphony of this great house, a theme handled in several different ways, is to be found in the tile mosaic set into the upper stucco walls of the exterior. This theme is a stylized geometric tulip. The four pink squares are the blossom of the tulip. The vertical row of tiny white squares compose the stem. The horizontal white rectangles are the leaves. The inscribed lines on the stucco are the roots. Repeated again and again, this design creates an over-all, grille-like pattern. Out of the elements in this composition (squares, thin horizontal rectangles, and vertical columns of tiny white squares) Mr. Wright developed many variations, some of which are shown here with more on the following page.



He used several materials when he played with the tulip theme: wrought iron, (Please turn the page)

This small section of the terrace façade demonstrates the variety that Wright can develop from one theme. Smallest unit of lantern design is related to every part of the French doors and tile mosaic. The way the lantern is mounted on the pier echoes way the pier projects from wall behind. Each part relates to the whole as the whole relates to each part. This is what Wright calls "organic design," producing a happy combination of unity and variety—in short, a melodic architecture.

Ground plan of these poured concrete plant boxes repeats motif of squares and rectangles in rest of house.

End-grain of wood beams is covered for weather protection with indented bronze, in yet another variation of theme electro-plated glass, glazed ceramic tile, bronze and concrete. Yet, each material lends itself to the theme in a way most becoming to its nature. Indented bronze caps the beam ends where they need protection from the weather. Concrete was poured into geometric forms to make raised planting beds. Bronze was made into a filigree lantern echoing the lattice of the mosaic walls and glazed with translucent white glass, repeating again the vertical lines of the white tiles in the mosaic. Columns of these white squares march up the windows, with different variations depending on the size and placing of the windows. Seen from the inside, they read to the eye like no more than the dappling light from dancing leaves outside the window.

A fern frond motif also runs through this house. Bronze finials on the trellis have a highly abstract fern motif.

Skylight in living room represents another variation of fern frond. A realistic fern mural was on fireplace wall.

These windows are really metal grilles, severe, straight-line patterns in a plane, with glass inserted in the grilles to form a single rhythmic arrangement of straight lines and squares. Great cunning has been used in these windows—15 different geometric patterns being used throughout the entire buildings complex—yet despite this great variety there is a quiet result. These patterns in glass are held together by electro-plating, a process whereby metal is formed by electric current along the edges of the glass pieces, lying in a bath, finally building up the liquid metal till the pieces are welded together.

This is but one example, in a long list of examples, of how Mr. Wright joyfully took to machine methods, as opposed to the old, slow, hand-leading techniques of the past. The Coonley house used hundreds of these electro-plated windows, and several dozen extras were ordered as replacements. These have (Please turn to page 322)

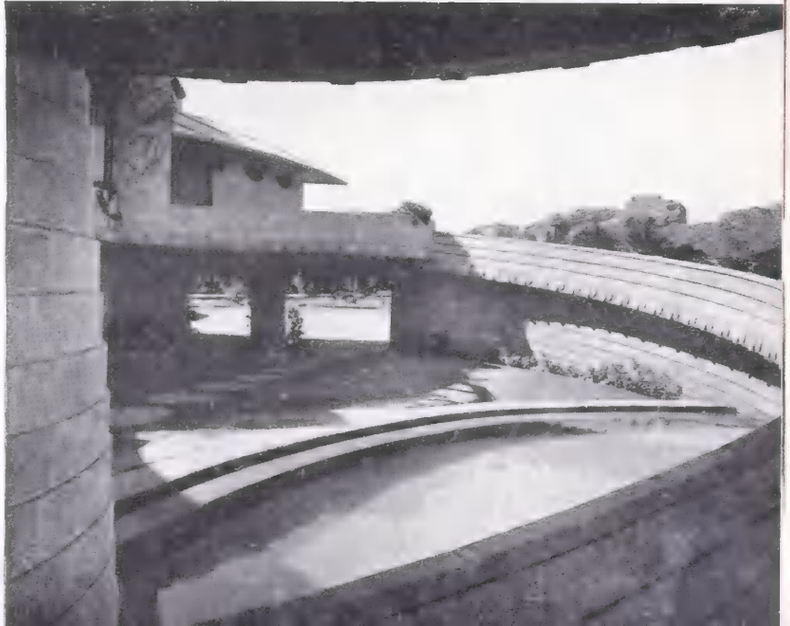
A Modern Castle in the Air

From the perpetual springs of Frank Lloyd Wright's genius comes one of his freshest, finest houses. Built of standard concrete block, it rises in a great curve of beauty above the dusty desert floor

You park your car in the motor court . . . you walk on circles of concrete through cool, green shades of court toward distant ramp .

Lifting the David Wright house in a circular plan above the orange groves and off the hot desert creates a shaded garden court and gives every room a full view of groves and mountains.

As a climax, but not an end, to our story of the world's greatest architect, we have, in this recent house designed for his son David Wright, one of the most exquisite examples of the romance and beauty he has brought—and at eighty-six continues to bring—to American life.



It symbolizes everything we have been saying about the meaning of Frank Lloyd Wright: his concern for the individual, his sense of the importance of interior space, his sensitivity to the character of the site, to the nature of materials and to the poetry of structure—in short, the perpetual freshness of form and design which springs from the profound principles of his organic architecture. In this one building, we can bring together and study everything he stands for in terms of both his philosophy of building and his even greater philosophy of living.

Here, in the Arizona desert, where man might easily be the least significant feature, he is king. His home is a castle in the air, curving above the hot, dusty floor of the desert, looking out in all directions above the tree tops of orange groves, "the lawn of the house," toward the surrounding mountains among which it stands as securely, as naturally, and fully as nobly as they.

You park your car and walk toward the ramp through the coolness of the garden court, which the house encircles and protects from the fierce sun, creating a pleasant transition between the desert heat and the air-conditioned interior. The garden court is an oasis of damp, green dichondra, which, combined with the swimming pool, creates a gentle wash of cool air. Then, up the lazily rising ramp, enjoying the flowers and the matchless view, (Please turn the page)

. . . you mount the easy, spiraling ramp, flowers at every step, a mountain view slowly revealed . . . then you enter.

As romantic as a setting for Romeo and Juliet, this living room balcony looks northeast across the court, over the orange groves, and toward the mountains. By now the bougainvillaea growing on the roof garden above (a ramp leads to it) has most likely covered the overhanging trellis.

One course of specially cast concrete block bears the decorative pattern of interlocking circles which repeats the circular theme of the house. Besides providing drip-points to prevent weather-staining, they express the floor-slab line.

you enter this little castle of a house and walk into the living room. Whether it is the first Wright house you will ever have been in, or the 200th, your reaction will be the same: a sense of expansiveness, of soaring, moving, unending spaciousness that only the best of the Gothic cathedrals might once have given you.

Now you know what Wright means by "The reality of a house is not its walls or roof, but the space within." You understand what his lifetime devotion to exploding the box-like rooms of traditional architecture has meant for us in the way of truly living rooms, beautiful rooms to live in and extraordinary exterior forms that are inseparable from them.

As you walk through the bedrooms and out on the balcony that sweeps half-way around the house, you marvel at the lack of right-angle corners, those traps for the spirit and the vision. You marvel, too, at the breadth of view from each window, offered by the oval plan, with never a view of each other and with a wide, protective overhang wherever needed. (Window of living room to our left faces northeast and is to be shaded by bougainvillaea growing above it.)

You see what is meant by Wright's "eloquence of materials": ceilings and woodwork are warm brown of Philippine mahogany, the boards following the great curves of the house. But it is the magic Mr. Wright performs with standard concrete block that moves you most. Fittingly, it was his son David who supervised the construction himself, using the conventional concrete blocks made by the Besser "Vibrapac" machine to their fullest, richest advantages, creating forms as plastic and fluid as the nature of concrete itself, stepping courses in or out to create interesting lines and shadows, emphasizing the quiet solidity of the masonry. One course was specially cast with a pattern (Please turn to page 352)

In this house Mr. Wright has completely exploded the box of ordinary architecture, creating rooms of circular spaciousness and sweeping views, as in the living room above. Noteworthy too is the harmony of the circular pattern of mahogany boards in the ceiling with the circular theme of the house.

Indoors and out, concrete block is exploited to its fullest and richest possibilities. Courses are laid, as in the fireplace of the master bedroom (left), in the over-all circular theme and stepped in or out to add interest and variety. House is air conditioned.

Much of this merchandise was not available for photography as this issue went to press, but these pictures give some idea of the character of what will be on sale, beginning in November and December, through department stores and decorators.

For sixty years Wright the architect has been designing furnishings for the homes of his clients—having furniture made by carpenters on the job or by wood-working mills, ordering fabrics woven to order, and often having rugs loomed in Austria, Morocco, Portugal or even the Orient.

Wright undertook the designing of furnishings as he undertook the designing of houses: to perform new functions in a new manner, which meant creating new forms. He was our first truly modern designer. Just as the houses he built were intended to meet the needs and advantages of modern tools, materials and ways of living, so he had to design furnishings for these houses, since they were not commercially available at that time.

The modern living room, which he had created, was a great, spacious room looking outdoors and combining many functions: dining room, living room, parlor, study, salon, music room and family room. He had to design pieces of furniture that would fulfill all these functions: chairs that could serve at mealtimes without being out of place in the living room, benches and incidental tables for conversation or party purposes, or for musical gatherings, desks that were as decorative as they were useful. Everything had to serve several ways. The Wright living room had become the real center of the home—and it has remained so ever since.

Wright insisted on one other thing, too: Everything had to perform in the modern manner and everything had to go together, as he insisted that the architecture of a house be integrated. Dining chair had to look well with sofa, and they both had to look as though they belonged in character and spirit with the architecture. This was another important reason for him to have undertaken the design of furnishings. (Text continued on page 336. More pictures on next 7 pages.)

All the furnishings in the dining room (opposite) illustrate Wright's principles of design. The intricately patterned curtains and wallpapers produce a tapestry-like effect that enriches without dominating. Carved molding accentuates edges of structural forms.

The fabrics and furniture above, from the Taliesin Ensemble, are used as they might be in a typical room. Sofas are upholstered box springs topped with foam-rubber pads, resting in a low cradle edged with carved molding. Drapery fabric is spun rayon.

The chest, below, is one of a series of cases made on a unit system. System permits combining many units along a wall (as seen on preceding page) to make one total architectural composition that has the richness of fine individual pieces of furniture.

ALL ACCESSORIES FROM BLOOMINGDALE BROS.

This sheer silk and Fortisan fabric is printed in a design created entirely by means of a compass. Pattern develops from the way overlapping arcs and partial circles are drawn and filled with color—typical of how Mr. Wright achieves ornament from "geometric gaiety." It comes in many colors.

THE SETTINGS ON THESE THREE COLOR PAGES WERE DECORATED BY VIRGINIA CONNOR DICK

Notice the harmonic relationship between this fabric and the carved molding on the coffee table. They do not match, but they are sympathetic—thus producing unity without monotony. Also note how this modern fabric of Belgian linen gives a fresh look to a traditional sofa. Equally interesting is how the Wright coffee table takes its place easily among traditional furnishings.

Wright has been designing hexagonal mahogany tables for 60 years, but always for production by a carpenter or a mill, never by a skilled furniture factory. So he is pleased with these, since they have fine craftsmanship, while representing the ultimate in simplicity of form. They rest on the floor as solidly as his houses settle into their sites. He likes to group together similar tables of different heights and sizes, as here. For other ways to group Wright's triangular and hexagonal tables see pictures on page 336.

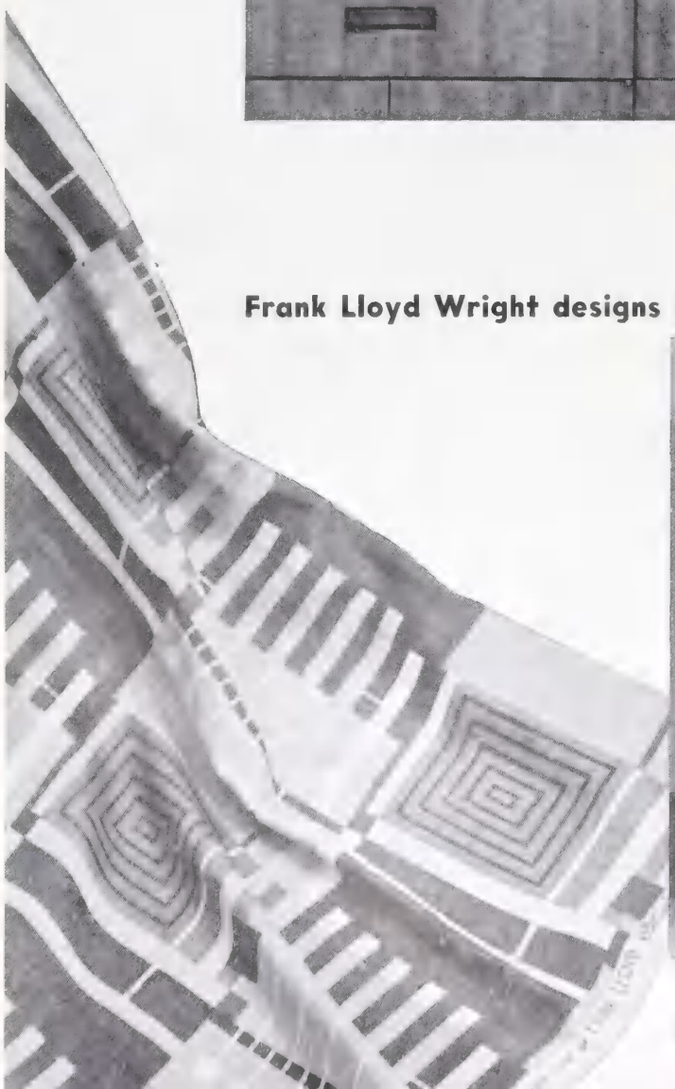
Left, a dining room Mr. Wright might assemble in a client's home. The furniture of mahogany (which he finds rich in color when finished naturally) might be placed on sympathetically colored 18th-century silk Persian carpet to bring out the warmth of the wood. He might ask a craftsman to weave rich hangings in the colors of the carpet with metallic threads, in either gold or copper, to echo gold or brass accessories. He'd bring in fine Oriental accessories, along with modern ones—perhaps a Japanese screen. Right, sideboard with fitted drawers for silver and removable shelf.

For a list of the accessories and furnishings not part of the Taliesin Ensemble, see page 338

On this page and at right is a desk (which could be a dressing table). It has its own typewriter table, which pulls out of the kneehole, yet its existence is not apparent when not in use. It puts the typewriter at the right height. It performs in all the ways that this type of piece is expected to do. And it does everything with an economy of space and without fuss. See opposite for example of its many functions and uses.

Here is the same table, multiplied by four, combining in a way that would take the place of a long table. Its 26" height makes it suitable for grouping along a glass wall, under a picture window or in front of a sofa as a high coffee table. It would also serve as an end table or lamp table with a low mat. It will sell for around $70.

Sixty years ago Wright saw that the living room must be not only a noble but a versatile space—able to shift its character easily from quiet family living to grand, glittering parties. This meant furniture that could play many roles. Here are some telling examples of such versatility



Mr. Wright believes that "The most desirable work of art in modern times is a living room, that is, a beautiful room in which to live." As a result, he gives a cathedral quality to his living rooms, and likes to see them filled with beautifully gowned women and handsomely dressed men. This means larger and often formal entertaining in the living room. Here is a very useful piece of equipment for such large entertaining: a personal table for a buffet party.

Mr. Wright has designed a line of accessories in exotic woods (with metal liners) to hold flowers, branches of foliage, fruit, shells, or whatever you might want to display. Some match the mahogany furniture; others are of walnut, ebony, rosewood and holly.

See how Mr. Wright co-ordinated the design of the furniture with one of his fabric designs. Both the moldings and the doors are echoed in the printed Belgian linen. Note how both relate to the cube of the wooden container on the sideboard above and left.

One of Mr. Wright's most remarkable marriages of house and site, the Edgar Kaufmann, Jr., residence (see page 246, "Falling Water") merges with the trees like the great rocks nearby and the falling water below.

is committed to the total effect. In each case where a Wright building is moved, in the mind's eye, from its original setting to something quite different, there is a distinct loss of architectural character and fitness, even though you were to move the buildings, intact, from one site to another.

This means that the beauty of a house cannot be separated from the nature of its site, that its design must be considered in relation to the features of its location.

To learn to look at a house in this way is to open your eyes to the meaning of good architecture, and, conversely, to the failure of any predetermined style, whether traditional or so-called modern.

For centuries mankind has bee in love with the sight of the Pa thenon, that pillared Greek te ple, high on its site of the Acro olis, dominating Athens. Haunte by it, the people of many coun'ri have slavishly imitated its form their homes and monuments, ho ing to achieve the same effect.

However, they forgot two thing First, the Parthenon was primari a building to be seen from the ou side, and so a bad model for home to be lived in; and, secon it may look magnificent on its gre climbing height, but on flat lar on Main Street or Broadway it

The last of the Prairie houses, according to Mr. Wright, this home of Herbert Johnson, Racine, Wisconsin, rides the grassy slopes of the shallow ravines with the lightness and security of a sturdy ship on a calm, quiet sea.

Would your family inherit a home or an unpaid mortgage?

New York Life's low-cost Mortgage Protection Plan provides cash to keep your home in the family!

Every man likes to think his home will endure —a haven for his family through the years. One way he can be sure is to guarantee immediate funds available for full payment of the mortgage remaining on his home if he should die. That way, his family will never be forced to sell at a loss or move to a less desirable location. And that's why New York Life designed its popular Mortgage Protection Plan.

Under this plan you buy a Term Insurance Policy for the amount of your mortgage. It is issued for a period of 15, 20, 25 or 30 years—depending on the length of your mortgage and on your age. The amount of the policy decreases each year—and as your mortgage is amortized would be sufficient to pay off the unpaid balance.

New York Life's Mortgage Protection Plan costs a small amount in comparison to the payments on your mortgage. It assures your family of the most comforting kind of security—a debt-free home! Ask your New York Life agent today.

Here's how New York Life's Mortgage Protection Plan works:

If at age 30, you have a 20-year mortgage for $10,000 on your home and you buy a $10,000 decreasing Mortgage Protection Term Policy with a 20-year period, your annual premium would be $65.40—which amounts to little more than $5 a month. After the second year any dividends could be used to reduce these premium payments. If you died the first year, your wife would receive the full $10,000. If you died later and mortgage payments had been kept up to date, she would receive an amount at least sufficient to pay off the unpaid balance. During the last 5 years, the amount remains constant at $3,500. After 20 years the policy terminates without value.

An alternate plan for mortgage protection combines term with permanent life insurance. While premiums are higher, this plan builds cash values which can be used later toward your own retirement. Or you can retain life insurance protection after you have paid off your mortgage.

by it, the people of many countries have slavishly imitated its form in their homes and monuments, hoping to achieve the same effect.

However, they forgot two things: First, the Parthenon was primarily a monument to be seen from the outside, and so a bad model for a home to be lived in; and, second, it may look magnificent on its great climbing height, but on flat land, on Main Street or Broadway it is as out of place and context as a man wearing a toga.

The Parthenon is part of its site and, as a result, of its function (worship was outdoors). You cannot repeat the quality of the Parthenon by imitating its form. You have to arrive at its beauty by building according to its principle: A structure must always be in harmony with its site and in accord with its aim.

THE essence of modern architecture is precisely this: to design and build with the best of today's techniques and materials to satisfy the special needs of the owner and the site. And it is the character of the land, the greatest living architect tells us, that is the beginning of a building aspiring to architecture.

Mr. Wright has whimsically drawn up what he calls the "prescription for a modern house":

"First, a good site," he says. "Pick one at the most difficult spot—pick a site no one wants—but pick one that has features making for character: trees, individuality, a fault of some kind in the realtor's mind.

"That now means getting out of the city.

"Then, standing on the site, look about you so that you see what has charm. What is the reason you want to build there? Find out! Then build your house so that you may still look from where you stood upon all that charmed you, and lose nothing of what you saw before the house was built, but see more. Architectural association accentuates the character of the landscape, if the architecture is right."

We start with the ground. Mr. Wright has said on another occasion. A building is placed on it to survive the elements, to provide shelter and human dignity.

Why should it belong to the ground, instead of perching like a box on top of it, as is the case with Colonial-style and cliché-modern houses?

Because our structure of the house begins with the ground, which already has form. Why not take that as our start? Why not begin by accepting the gifts of nature? No colonial-style imitation does this. Nor does one of the boxy, all-glass, or half-glass-half-concrete, modernistic ones do it. They both look as though they hated the ground, "with vast vanity trying to rise superior to it regardless of nature," depending for their human values on pseudoclassical concepts derived from habit and academic memory.

Well, then, Mr. Wright continues, what of the ground?

Is it a parcel of prairie, square and flat?

Is it sunny or is it the shaded slope of some hill, high or low? Is it bare or wooded? Has the site some features: trees, rocks, a stream? Some fault or a special virtue?

"In any and every case the character of the site is the beginning of the building that aspires to architecture. And this is true, whatever the site or the building may be."

In our partisanship for contemporary living, many of us forget that modern can be a style, as rigid and predetermined as any other, if it has a fixed point of view toward what the form of a house should be: flat roof, no matter what the site; up on stilts, even when it makes no sense; unshaded glass walls, whether or not they face a hot western sun; and so on.

It is not only traditional architecture and conventional styles, then, that disregard the land on which they have decided to occur; it is any kind of architecture that approaches the site with disdainful or unseeing eyes, that builds according to some stubborn notion of its own, using the same style and pattern over and over, regardless of the situation.

Whether a modernistic house by Le Corbusier or Mies van der Rohe, or a Greek Revival building of the Nineteenth Century, each appeals to a "classic" memory of the Parthenon and is thoroughly out of touch with anything but history. Each expresses an attitude toward life that, once understood, will take us a long way toward understanding why we do—or we don't—like the architecture it produces.

There are, on the whole, two ways open to us in our homes: to build with an acceptance of our natural environment; or to build so as to separate ourselves from it, except from a spectatorial vantage point behind a closed, glass wall, as if looking at life through a television screen.

The former philosophy is intrinsic in the organic architecture of Frank Lloyd Wright. The latter is the ideologic background for a type of modern referred to as the International Style, another in a long series of styles deriving from classicism.

Although the latter style occurs in individual houses, it prefers working with tall, block-like skyscrapers with four sides of glass. It prefers a gigantic order of one monumental building after another, in a great city, to small communities of separate houses, isolated from each other and standing on their own pieces of land.

The International Style derives its values—of culture, of entertainment, of life itself—from strictly man-made sources. It draws a sharp line between man and nature, between a house and the land. Consequently, the houses it designs have forms with a slickly tailored look that is in striking contrast to the foliage, trees and contours of the site on which these houses, half-embarrassedly, half-contemptuously, find themselves. No matter what the site, the International Stylist builds the same stylized house upon it.

IN THE article on Mr. Wright (page 241), "The Man who Liberated Architecture," we have described his warm, indeed joyous, welcoming of the natural life. "The earth's beauty so grows on me," he says, "that the longer I live the more beautiful it becomes. A walk in our countryside, when the shadows are lengthening, is to look and drink a poignant draught—and look and drink again. I wonder if anything in heaven can be so lovely. If not, how tragic death must be! Death or no death, I see our countryside as a promise never to be broken."

It is a promise not to be broken in the sense that no house should ever desecrate the landscape and no man be deprived of its riches.

Garden and building may now be one, Mr. Wright tells us. Our houses can reach spaciously outdoors and invite the spaces outdoors in. It is difficult to say where the garden ends and the house begins in any good organic structure—and that is all as it should be. Because organic architecture assumes that we are, by nature, ground-loving animals, and so long as we court the ground, know the ground, and sympathize with what it has to give us, we shall enjoy our birthright.

FOR all these reasons, Mr. Wright has become passionate in his opposition to the International Style and to what he calls "pig-piling" in our crowded cities. The automobile, he believes, instead of being used as a vehicle for decentralization has tended to become an instrument for congestion, although, thanks to it, we may now go anywhere to live even at a good distance from where we work.

There is a new opportunity in America, he remarked one night to a London audience: flying, motoring, telephone, telegraph, radio and television have given our life a new spaciousness. We can leave the cages we call cities. "We no longer need to live on little plots of ground with our toes in the street and a little back yard behind us with a few plants in it, shaking hands out of the windows on either side with neighbors good and bad.

"Not that I believe in a 'back to the land' movement." Mr. Wright hastened to explain. "I think that any backward movement would be folly; but now we can go forward intelligently with all science has to offer, with the new architectural forms which must be made for the accommodation of life, so that men may live more generously, more spaciously and more fully."

Critics of this feature of Wright's philosophy are somewhat too quick to dismiss it as romantic, unrealistic or simply nostalgic. Despite his disclaimer of leading a "back to the land" movement, that is virtually what they accuse him of, claiming, in turn, that as a result civilization as we know it would disappear, since it has always been a city-bred affair. In addition, these critics say, people like to herd closely together in cities, and it is good for them that they do.

The Future of Architecture, published by Horizon Press.) They are worth quoting here, since they are so pertinent. What follows is an edited version:

A young Englishman, addressing the Chairman, took issue with what he had heard from the speaker (Mr. Wright):

"Mr. Frank Lloyd Wright (he objected) has said that houses should be built in order that people might live happily in them, and that those houses should be suited to the needs of the family. A working-class family with several children who have to live in three or four rooms can still be very happy, and, since they live in such a small space, they become like sailors on board ship; they learn to respect each other's requirements . . . There is no better man than the Cockney soldier, and no one who can bear hardships with greater fortitude and cheerfulness. I think that is due to the fact that he has lived what I may call a battleship existence through living in crowded quarters. His wife can lean out of the window and talk comfortably to her neighbor. There is much to be said for such a life."

TO THIS Mr. Wright replied: "Is that drudge-a-day life the beau ideal, then, of modern civilization—the battleship existence of which you speak? If it is, then I think the speaker perfectly right, and suggest that the more we can compress our people the better; the less space we give them the more effective the result will be. And in that case I really do not see why they should need as much space as they have got now.

"Why not put the pressure on still more, so that they may fight even better? Because they have not known a better life, and probably will not know it in this generation or the next, or the next, I suppose where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise!

"The existence the speaker describes is, however, to me a negation of life rather than any affirmation of it. I deplore the circumstances in which such lives must be spent. It is just that kind of thing that the modern movement and life itself are opposed to.

"It is true that human life may be satisfied or habituated under pressures to adapt itself to whatever circumstances, even the bombing of women and children as modern warfare. But is life to end there? Why did Englishmen go to the new country we call ours now? Why have we this great new nation and this new country of America? It is because, long ago, Englishmen said No to that idea of yours, sir . . . To be humane we must stand for a philosophy of freedom, rather than for any philosophy of battleship existence."

The next objection was to Mr. Wright's point of view toward decentralization of the city and a reintegration of life on a smaller scale in smaller communities.

"What would the community life be like?" he was asked. "Wouldn't it be a threat to civilization, if the city were to disappear?"

Mr. Wright's answer to this last objection follows:

"We live in a period of transition, and it will take many decades of transition for the outlines of what I have given you as Broadacre City [the new community life] to become visible.

"You must not think the kind of buildings we now have are going to remain, or that community needs as they are now will remain as they are now. They are all going to change as a new and finer type of building in a freer community we do not yet foresee (except that it will be more of the country) growing up. The more of such buildings we have in the country the more beautiful community life will become.

"As for the definite future pattern of the community life in such circumstances, who knows just what any community life of the future is going to be like? The old relationships are bound to change. The motor-car has already vitally affected the rural community life of our United States. Nearly every man will soon have a car.

"A realization is growing that community life in the sense that it is now lived in small hamlets, villages and cities is no longer necessary. Ease of inter-communication is making ten miles today what two city blocks used to be. As I have said, many times, an entirely new space-consciousness is entering into all of life, town or country.

"As architects we must look beyond the tolerances and ignorance of the moment, rural or urban, and try to see the future. If we are not able to see beyond the present and to plan accordingly for the future, I think community life will remain a battleship life and we shall stay where we are—eventually to fight for existence in trenches in our city parks or rot in bombproof cellars."

So Mr. Wright ended his reply.

BY QUOTING so extensively, we have gone afield, it seems, from the opening of this article on the character of the site being the beginning of architecture. However, in the profoundest sense possible, the character of the site, and the character of the house which follows from it, will determine the character of our civilization and culture. It will decide whether we maintain the rhythm and beat of life in harmony with that of nature.

The study of civilization tells us that Mr. Wright's warning about city life and complete withdrawal from natural forces is not lightly to be dismissed. It may not be easily defined—it is even difficult to describe—but there is something in the relationship of man with the organic life of which he is a part that is vital to the nourishment of his spirit and to the health of his mind and effort.

Insofar as a man's home is the center for much of his life, it is important to that life. And insofar as his home determines his contact with the life-enhancing values of the physical world around him, it is critical to the future of the ways of life we call American.

Once upon a time, men congregated in cities because only in this manner could they exchange the stimulation of ideas and enjoy a lively world. "The salt and savor of individual wit, taste and character then made the city a festival of life; a true carnival as compared with the drab over-run city of our day." (Frank Lloyd Wright)

In its prime, Florence contained perhaps a hundred thousand inhabitants. New York, when it was an attractive city, less than two million. Neither has added to its appeal or meaning by adding to its population or size.

Whether we regret it or not, Mr. Wright is trying to tell us, we are witnessing the disappearance of the city we once loved—the day of its electric spark of curiosity and surprise and human contact is fast vanishing. Now the city is a towering factory with an architecture that is more and more factory-like, more and more out of human scale.

And whether we regret it or not, new centers of culture are appearing where new centers of life, with a firm basis in life, are being built. The new American culture, like the dream of American freedom itself, is being worked out by individuals on their own land, in homes that encourage the flowering of the spirit by rooting it deeply into the soil and inspiring it to reach for the sun.

This, we believe, is what Frank Lloyd Wright means by "the character of the site is the beginning of architecture." For our architecture and our culture are inseparable from each other.

infinite variety. It can go on forever. Yes, it is infinite. That is why I show you these little manifestations of housing. Not only does this opportunity for individual expression develop form by way of changes of material, but it changes owing to the slightest influence of environment. All is recorded by changes in form.

That one (pointing to a shell) is a sober sister, isn't it, all gray and smooth and white inside. It makes you feel pretty stupid to see this infinite variety, doesn't it? And we sit down at our drafting boards and try to do something!

Well, what is this element in nature which produces such fascinating, rich, harmonious individualities? Is it the same element that produces different human races, differing individualities within the races? Yes, it is all the same. But what is the secret of the forming of it all? These are the major things you should study, as artists, in the great book of creation. Because here is where the artist finds light thrown on what he feels. This expression of inner life by appropriate form is really his field.

Now, is there a mind, would

you say, producing these infinite changes of form in nature? Is it a matter of mind? What is doing this? Why is it done? Science can investigate it, but science comes against a barrier it can never pierce. What this inner life is, we do not know. But this innate source of expression is what should inspire you all—give you faith in your own divinity, if that is the word for it, in your own inspiration, if that is more understandable.

You see, there never is a limit. Nothing indicates that the infinite variety could end, so long as the principle is inviolate. Look at this little beauty. Such a sweet little individuality! Civilization comes in and says, "Oh hell, let's get an easy pattern out of this, so we can stamp them out, all just the same." It becomes a cliché, a style. Then the divine element in it goes out. The quality that is divine disappears.

Housing has become a mere materiality of no great value to life whatsoever, except as little breeding stables entirely without any sense of God. There must have been a sense of God in these little forms to produce this infinite beauty of form. Just as there must be slumbering in all of us. There is in us, too, that interior sense of becoming, which we call God, working in us all, and which, you will see, has infinite capacity which no human mind can ever encompass and imprison.

THERE in these shells you have humble innate evidence. If we go into the human phases of what we call our divinity and consider the inherent element at work in us, as in all of life, you may find the same idea. Therein lies the value of these little things to us, if we study them as artists should. Here, in nature, is an architect's "school."

The coral family is another fascinating family, because the innate principle works in the coral branch in totally different schemes, and yet the same. Some of the branches will grow out in the water as great long spears and wave to and fro with the movement of the water, all on a little hinge, and then at times become detached and float away to find another attachment, and the whole thing goes on over and over again.

There is, in all of this, an element of becoming, determining the shape of these things. Form develops accordingly; its circumstances are always by way of its own life principle.

Now, this common tendency throughout them all unites them. In all of us there is exactly the same thing working all the time. What would our divinity be? Certainly divinity is manifest here in these shells, in their humble form of life.

NOW, how about us, the highest form of life, we say? What has become of us? Are science and civilization killing our divinity, instead of developing it? What are we pursuing? What is it that we call civilization if it lacks the harmonious forms developed by inner principle, by true individuality?

Nature loves individuality, resists and punishes the loss of it in any field of creation. If our civilization goes contrary to this divinity within the nature of us all, if it does not learn these secrets of behavior, of character, of appropriate changes of form, then what is going to happen to us? Where shall we go? Now is the time for us to say wherein lies salvation for us as human beings.

Is the solution creativity? Yes, that is the element needed now. It alone can prevent us from becoming standardized, from losing our rich and potent sense of life, which we see here as the beauty of these shells in their housing.

When we can see what is done by forms of life on the plane of the sea shell, we may glimpse what we should be doing on our own plane. We are not now doing anything at all like it. Why aren't we? It is for that that architects are members of society: for the preservation of individuality, thus making beautiful, in various ways, the common necessity of living. That is our job. I do not think we could have a better instance of common generic principle at work as individuality than in these little shells.

What is our conclusion? This one: Once you understand the principle upon which this differentiation depends, you will astonish your kind by your own prolific capacity. To always turn out a different design from the one you did before will become inevitable. The secret of that variety is inherent in nature. She is jealous of it! If an architect does not have that secret, he will not be a great artist. He is missing essential quality. The key to creation is not in him.

MUSIC and Frank Lloyd Wright

Without music, this great architect says, you are incomplete. And the completeness of man is the all-important goal at Taliesin

By RICHARD WILLIAMS

I'm afraid that the finest reporter on music and Frank Lloyd Wright is not this writer, but Mr. Wright himself.

Last Easter, or rather the Saturday before Easter, I posed a rather broad question to him. "Does music mean a great deal to you?" It was really a question meant to get the conversation going that Saturday afternoon at Taliesin West.

"How can anybody interested in architecture," he replied, "not be deeply interested in music?"

And how could anybody who has seen his buildings, read his books or joined the Taliesin Fellowship on any of its gala, or even weekly, occasions not immediately recognize the kinship of Mr. Wright and music?

"To each child, early in his life," he has written in his Autobiography, "I gave a musical instrument. To learn to play it was all I asked of their education.

"To Lloyd, a cello; John, a violin; Catherine, voice; Frances, a piano; David, a flute; Llewelyn, a guitar and a mandolin. Their mother played the piano. I played the piano a little myself, trying to improvise, letting the piano play itself."

That was early in Mr. Wright's life. But it has not changed, except that his official family, the Fellowship, has grown to several dozen. "Good music is essential to our life at Taliesin," he wrote in 1932 and he repeats it more strongly now.

It was Easter when I met him, and Easter at Taliesin West, the reawakening of spring, is a great affair. I might easily have assumed that it was a special affair in the fact that music was played, but I would have been wrong. The Fellowship has been gathering for music, movies and other entertainment on Saturday and Sunday evenings since it began, October, 1932. They met originally in the living room. Some years later, they were to have a theater of their own creation and for their own use both in Taliesin, Wisconsin, and Taliesin West, Arizona.

Writing of these week-end events, Mr. Wright has said that he never failed to enjoy one of them. Putting his words into the present tense, we might say with him, "They are always happy and always fresh—not only composed of perfectly good material, good music, good food, enthusiastic young people, good company, but something rare and fine is in the air of these homely events by way of architectural environment. You might call it atmosphere.

"No one feels or looks commonplace. Both Taliesins are made by music for music, and enter into the spirit of the occasion, as if one were made for the other. Eye music and ear music do go together to make a happy meeting for the mind—and the happy union charms the soul . . . There is something vital and happy radiating from the Fellowship on these happy occasions when everybody serves everybody else as though he were somebody, and willingly takes the part in the entertainment he has been rehearsing."

On the Easter occasion when I was present, we were in the living room of the main house at first. Mr. Wright's apprentices and a good part of his family were gathered around him. The women were handsomely dressed. The men were, too. They were standing rather formally when Mr. Wright asked them to sit down and relax a bit. Presently they did, and some then listened to our talk on music.

His father, Mr. Wright said, had been a professional musician who loved music, and he himself as a young boy had been introduced to it, and had been taught to play the piano. But he never managed to play it specially well. It did not matter, however, he said, whether as an amateur, which he was, one played particularly well.

It did not matter either what instrument you preferred. He himself liked the strings better than other instruments. What did matter was your feeling for music. Without it you were incomplete. The completeness of man was the important goal, the ideal for which he strove. This is what he tried to impart to his apprentices. Music can and, indeed, must be used, if your life is to be satisfactorily firm and full.

He preferred Beethoven to all other composers. He felt in Beethoven's symphonies and quartets an architectural quality, a sense of design, expressed with greater sureness and greater clarity than in the work of any other musician. Out of short and seemingly unpromising themes, Beethoven built an edifice in which nothing was superfluous, nothing merely pretty, nothing added as meaningless decoration, but in which the sense of beauty, the sense of heightened life, was clearly to be felt. Beethoven and architecture were related.

That there is a connection between music and architecture, that in fact they are sister arts, has been observed by many. Goethe called architecture "frozen music" and said that "the tone of mind produced by architecture approaches the effect of music."

Dickens once spoke of the architect as a man who could build a church by squinting at a sheet of paper. Exactly the same could be said of the composer, who can build a world of sound by squinting at a piece of ruled paper. It seemed to me that the kinship of architecture and music could be understood in that marvelous desert house.

I had heard and read much about Taliesin West and had seen many pictures of it. The main structure is of course far more than a "modern" house which has by now been so often imitated as to have become a commonplace of today's style. You very soon forget that it is "modern" or you cease to care whether it is ancient or modern. What you do feel, and feel with all your senses, is the relationship it establishes between where you are and what is around you, the relationship between the room and the desert. You do not look out of the window at some picture-postcard view. You live within a vast horizon, you are, so to speak, the center of a very wide world which paradoxically enough soon becomes intimate and comfortable. Nature at large becomes your own private property—without any fences.

I WAS reminded of something I had once read in Ruskin. Later I found the quotation:

"An architect should live as little in cities as a painter. Send him to our hills, and let him study there what nature understands by a buttress, and what by a dome."

Beethoven worked and thought that way. He went into the hills and the woods and fields and there as he walked he composed. But whatever the working habits of the composer to whom you are listening may have been, the effect of great music is one of feeling yourself as the center of a wide world.

Music plays an important part in the life of the apprentices of Taliesin Fellowship. This is a group of about 50 utterly devoted young men and women who live at Taliesin with Mr. and Mrs. Wright and under their guidance take part in a life based in the interdependence of all the arts.

In all this instruction, Mrs. Wright takes an important part. It is she who is the professional musician in the family, being herself somewhat of a composer.

The members of Wright's Fellowship may stay with him as little as one year and as long as ten. All of them listen to music and almost all of them make music in one form or another. Phonographs provide built-in music at both Taliesin but greater emphasis is placed on homemade music. Among these young architects there are to be found enough musicians to form chamber groups of four or six or eight.

A particular pride of the place is a chorus of 20 which rehearses daily. In addition there is dancing, or rather the performance of movements based on ancient religious rituals and on Oriental temple dances which are designed to teach the correlation of mind and body. These are taught by the Wrights' daughter, Iovanna, a pretty girl who studied in Paris, now married and living at Taliesin.

The music made by these amateurs and students comprises many kinds of music by composers of diverse periods and nationalities. The chorus may sing Palestrina and Bach. The latter eighteenth-century music with its rich baroque ornamentation sounds quite natural in the Arizona surroundings, just as the old Chinese porcelain figures which are worked into the stone walls of the buildings blend quite naturally with the landscape.

The chorus may also sing an American folk song, a Negro spiritual or a modern song. There is no limitation of style or school. It is significant, however, that Mr. Wright himself, the great modern, prefers nineteenth-century music. As to the efforts of the ultra-modern, very new composers, Mr. Wright dislikes them. He finds little nourishment in them.

"I feel sorry for these composers," he says, "because it comes all from the brain and not from the Last summer's festival at Taliesin, Wisconsin, began with Marco Polo's arrival in Venice, or at least a play-acted version of it by costumed members of Frank Lloyd Wright's Fellowship. The mood and spirit were sustained hour after delightful hour.

At Taliesin, parties

They are playful, above all, with a sense of play that has pleasure-in-depth. They are the product of the creativity and encouraged talent of every member of Wright's Taliesin Fellowship

One-quarter life-size, the simulated boat, or galleon, of Marco Polo lies alongside the gaily-decked pier and "barber poles."

are artistic affairs

When Frank Lloyd Wright, together with Mrs. Wright, established the Taliesin Fellowship in 1932, they planned it to be as much a way of life as a long, intensive course in architecture and the allied arts, which include music, sculpture, painting, weaving and the dance.

In other words, they had in mind nothing less than the complete man, for it was their conviction that nothing less would produce an architecture worthy of America.

And nothing, in our opinion, more brightly demonstrates the completeness of the Taliesin Fellowship than the weekly parties or, better, the great, four-times-a-year festivals. There is, to begin with, the winter festival at Taliesin West, which really celebrates spring coming to the Arizona desert. There is the Easter Morning feast and, third, the celebration of Mr. Wright's birthday on June 8. There is, finally, the end-of-the-summer festival at Taliesin, Wisconsin, whose pictures enliven these pages.

As you may see for yourself, each festival has a theme. This time it was early Renaissance Venice and the earlier arrival of Marco Polo from his exciting trip of discovery to the Orient. Everything was integrated around the central theme. (Integration is the key word at Taliesin.) Costumes, music, musical instruments, decorations were highly Renaissance, if not High Renaissance.

Fifty or sixty apprentices and their families joined fifty to sixty guests to make it the gayest, most beautiful party we have ever seen. Everyone was caught up by the mood and playfulness of the festival with never a false or forced note in the fun. (Please turn the page)

It began in the afternoon. The guests seated themselves comfortably on cushions and chairs. Then, down the dammed-up pond below Taliesin came an exquisite Venetian-style boat, one-quarter life size. It was colorful, glorious, unforgettable for those of us who were there.

The boat, or perhaps we should say the galleon, pulled up alongside the pier and out came one of the Taliesin men dressed as Marco Polo, accompanied by a group in the full regalia of the Renaissance (if they telescoped a few centuries together, who cared?).

They came bearing gifts, platters of luscious food, trunks filled with precious fabrics. To Mr. Wright, the Doge of this improvised Venice, and to Mrs. Wright, the Dogaressa, they made their presentations. To each guest a gift: silk stoles for the women, silk scarfs for the men.

It was all done with great pageantry, with all the pomp necessary for the circumstance. Bright-colored balloons, festive Venetian barber poles decked with streamers and pennants, rich silks and richer velvets: flourishes and recitations.

One end of the pier had been made into a platform, and on this platform they performed, one after the other, and in groups. They danced with music and dance movements of their own. They acted in comedies and little dramas of their own contrivance.

It was beyond a professional performance. It had something of the old English masques, of Elizabethan lustiness and gusto, of Italian commèdia dell'arte with its spontaneous and quick-witted humor.

It had pace and change of pace. It was theatrical and spectacular, but with a once-in-a-lifetime flavor of a once-in-a-life-time performance. It was born to live but one day, and what a lovely day they decided to make it.

Pilaff was served and it seemed very fitting (if not Far Eastern, at least pilaff is Near Eastern and Venice is far nearer to the Near East than to the Far East). Along with everything else, they cooked and served this delicious meal.

That should have been enough, but it wasn't. It was only the first of a three-stage entertainment.

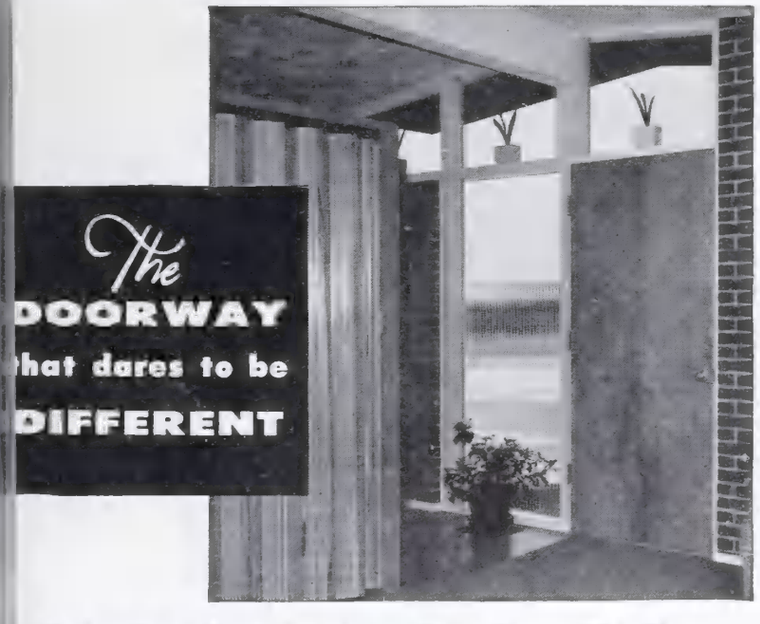
Following dinner, we went to the theater, part of another complex of buildings on Taliesin's thousands of acres, designed by Mr. Wright and built by the Fellowship, worthy of its own full story.

The road to the theater was edged with burning flares to mark our way. When we arrived, two little boys dressed as pages handed us a program written on a tightly-furled scroll. There were 15 numbers on the program. We recall now a touching recital of Shakespearean sonnets, a formal Venetian dance by four couples and a playlet in which Boccaccio accused Shakespeare of stealing his plots.

We had music of the period on antique instruments, all played by members of the Taliesin Fellowship. Harpsichords, recorders, violins, a full string ensemble. We could wax at long length about the meaning of music at Taliesin and, indeed, we already have on page 306. So we need not repeat it here. Suffice to say, music was as important, it seemed to us, as the architecture in the creation of an environment of beauty and harmony and gaiety.

Then the third stage of this great, end-of-the-summer festival in Wisconsin, among whose fields of grain and fruit, swollen with the rains of the season, purple and bursting with a liquid richness, we returned along the same flare-brightened roads to the pond.

Here, 2,000 lighted votive candles had been set afloat on the water, bobbing, winking, drifting like water bugs turned fireflies. And then? Fireworks! Fireworks as fine as any we've seen along the Hudson or in the Versailles gardens of France. Pyrotechnical patterns against the black sky. At last, to bed. Sleep came tardily that night.



IN BED we reflected on what we had just witnessed. What did it all mean?

We already had some idea of the talent at Taliesin from the weekly parties. But here we had seen something that seemed to have taken a giant leap into the upper reaches of imagination and entertainment.

But isn't that the quality of Wright's architecture? we asked ourselves. Isn't there an exuberance, a generosity of spirit, an acceptance of life's festivity in his work that must come from the same attitude in his life? To ask these questions was to answer them.

Mr. Wright himself, ironically enough, is regularly reluctant when the idea of each party is broached, but fully part of it when it takes place. Mrs. Wright, knowing this, takes charge of the affairs.

To her should go much of the praise for bringing out and encouraging each hidden talent at Taliesin. A shy boy she hides behind a mask so that, behind the mask, he might be the gay, dashing cavalier that he dreams of becoming. Another she teaches to dance. Every day the chorus practises its songs, the string ensembles their quartets. Would it be farfetched to say that as Mr. Wright brings out the nature of each material, so Mrs. Wright brings out the nature of each apprentice?

The parties, unbelievable as it may seem, are actually matters of but a few weeks' planning and a few all-night preparations. They are meant to be fun, not exercises in designing, but they rapidly become pleasure with meaning and depth, and turn into occasions for fantasy and invention.

Party themes have varied from "Come as a famous painting" to "Life on the moon." But once the theme has been picked the apprentices work consistently, even if imaginatively, within it. Since they all sing or dance or play a musical instrument, they all can participate in one way or another. No one is a spectator at a professional show. All are amateurs in the true sense of the word, loving what they do.

It does make for completeness, we believe. One might say it makes for a complete way of life: self-nourished, self-entertained, self-inspired, self-sufficient. It creates a flesh and blood picture of Wright's philosophy of what American life might be, once it withdrew from the passive existence encouraged by big city entertainment and went forward to a life with nature on a smaller, more human scale.

feeling and color. It is uncluttered, uncomplicated by forced forms unnatural to its physical character. The wood of the ceiling becomes the wood of the eaves. The inner spaces are thus wed to the outer spaces, and unity is achieved.

The materials of building are to the creative architect what words are to the poet. But materials, as words, must express their true meaning to be beautiful and real. Each must be employed in the poetry of the structure according to the fundamental characteristics of its nature. Basically, the nature of concrete is its plasticity and, as we have shown on page 252, this quality can be employed to produce great integral enrichment.

However, a more fundamental beauty in concrete is to be seen when, combined with steel reinforcement, it is cast in light, refined, delicate shapes like those shown below. This light, inexpensive, coffered-concrete-block structural system was developed by Mr. Wright for the Usonian House. In this system, one basic shape (with 6 variations) forms ceilings, walls and solid fences (solid block), glazed and unglazed screens (open block). In each case the resulting forms are honest concrete. They exploit the characteristics of concrete and thus create an interesting and variable beauty.

This beauty is the beauty of engineering, according to the nature of materials, a new esthetic, in which the sound principle creates the form without regard for sentimental convention or eclectic prejudice. Here the warm quality of home is expressed in a fresh new system of construction, designed to adapt a contemporary technical skill to the individual needs of personal homemaking.

Our scientific skills are daily developing new materials and methods which are revolutionizing our concepts of building. Aluminum, magnesium, steel alloys, glass, copper, plastics, all of these materials, when understandingly employed, as by Mr. Wright in many of his buildings, are contributing to the greater enrichment and comfort of our living.

But honest creative effort should not be confused with novelty for novelty's sake. The great principle of the nature of materials is as valid when applied to the products of industry as it is when applied to the materials of nature. For it is "the rightness of the thing" we seek.

The clear, fresh, integral quality of plastics opens new vistas of use, new freedom in design. (See V. C. Morris shop in San Francisco on page 257). Yet this use is honest and the forms and methods express the real quality of plastics. The "rightness" is self-evident. As steel and glass made the concept of open spaces possible, so these new materials and methods are contributing to the expansion of that concept.

A new usefulness, a new freedom, is in the making, so beautiful that one can truly feel that a great architecture is becoming a living part of our culture. This new architectural environment is the direct result of a number of principles, of which building in the nature of materials, is a very important one.

Perhaps we, as laymen, can best make a contribution to it by being ourselves aware of the personality of stone, of plastic, of copper, of wood, of all the things that surround us. Only then might we see a natural beauty in them or.

rather, a beauty that is natural to them, for it is not always a natural material we are asked to appreciate.

The concrete block as used in the Ennis House on page 252 was never before employed with such beauty, because Mr. Wright recognized the concrete block as a plastic and malleable material that needed the impress of human imagination. And he impressed it with a pattern of his own design to lift it above itself.

Similarly, he has used copper with a stamped pattern for the fascias and spandrels of his buildings, knowing how effective the copper would become in time as it turned a rich bronze-green. Once one knows the effect of weather on each material, which means knowing its nature, one can plan accordingly and count on its effects to create greater and greater beauty.

In the case of Mr. Wright's work, time is the beautifier. The wood becomes more wonderful, the masonry more and more like the natural horizontal coursings of a quarry; the building takes on the character of a living, maturing oak tree.

We, of course, are not called on to design our own houses with an understanding of all the many materials that must be used. But we are going to live in them and we will enjoy our life more fully if we understand the characteristics of the materials surrounding us. To understand them is to go far towards heightening our pleasure in them if they have been used in such a way that their nature is not forever hidden or warped.

Perhaps we might approach this understanding vicariously at first, and eventually in our own direct experience. Few, we believe, are so alive to materials, to the physical world around them, as Frank Lloyd Wright. And few have expressed it so well, in building or in writing.

It is he who wrote, "Each material has its own message and, to the creative artist, its own song." And it is he who wrote these words on the acute workings of the mind and eye of a creative architect (perhaps, of any alert person):

"The country between Madison and Janesville [Wisconsin], near Taliesin, my home and workshop, is the old bed of an ancient glacier drift. Vast, busy gravel pits abound there, exposing heaps of yellow aggregate. Great heaps, clean and golden, are always waiting there in the sun. And I never pass on my way to and from Chicago without an emotion, a vision of the long dust-whitened stretches of the cement mills grinding to impalpable fineness the magic powder that would 'set' it all to shape.

"Nor do I ever come to a lumber yard with its citylike, graduated masses of fresh shingles, boards and timbers, without taking a deep breath of its fragrance, seeing the forest laid low in it by processes that cut and shaped it to the architect's scale of feet and inches, coveting it all.

"The rock ledges of a stone quarry are a story and a longing to me. There is a suggestion in the strata, and character in the formation. I like to sit and feel the stone as it is there. Often, I have thought, were great monumental buildings ever given to me to build, I would go up to the Grand Canyon of Arizona to ponder them.

"When in early years I looked south from the massive stone tower in the Auditorium Building [designed by Louis Sullivan for Chi-now got into the hands of art collectors, who hang them on their walls as though they were Piet Mondrian's geometric paintings, which they preceded by a good number of years.

Though Mr. Wright believes that a house should be a fine architectural background for natural foliage and flowers, he has frequently developed a conventionalization of leaves and flowers as mural decoration and patterned windows. But always these stay as a quiet foil to the nature forms from which they derive and with which they intimately associate.

More important, by Wright standards, these decorations are always in the character of the building itself. The ornamentation is wrought in the pattern and rhythm of the structure. Always, the motif is adhered to throughout, so that one can readily see how the building esthetically seems cut from one piece of goods and hangs together with an integrity otherwise impossible.

Floor plan of the main living room of the Coonley house showing how palatially and luxuriously Wright was designing as early as 1907. Compared to plans of other extensive houses of the same period, this one offered vastly more in amenities, and pioneered much we now take for granted.

As Mr. Wright said as far back as 1908: "An excessive love of detail has ruined more fine things from the standpoint of fine art or fine living than any one human shortcoming: it is hopelessly vulgar. Too many houses, when they are not little stage settings or scene paintings, are mere notion bazaars or junk shops. Decoration is dangerous unless you understand it thoroughly and are satisfied that it means something good to the scheme as a whole. Merely that it 'looks rich' is no justification for the use of ornament."

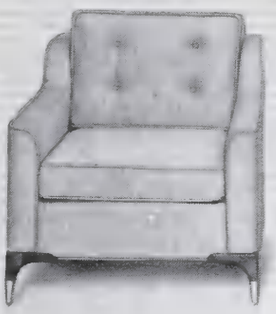
But the variety of ornamentation in the Coonley house is related to the building as well as to the floor plan, shown on page 322. There is unity among all the elements, yet the unity is never monotonous for there is enough variety in the way the motifs have been worked out. The part relates to the whole as the whole relates to each of the parts. So the smallest detail is in sympathy—in harmony, you might say—with any other small detail, as well as with every other part—large or small.

This is an important thing to understand about the richness of Wright's design. It is never an applied ornamentation, but is always integrated with the character of the over-all structure. There are peace and repose in the familiar and recurring. But if an obvious pattern were repeated again and again—without variation—it would produce boredom and monotony. Mr. Wright never does this. He joyfully shakes endless variations out of his sleeve like a magician performing card tricks. He bestows on every object its fit proportion—neither more nor less.

The Coonley house is a splendid example of what Frank Lloyd Wright has always said America could have if it so desired: "An architecture so rich in the life of today that just because of it life will be better worth living." We have technologies and technicians to achieve this dream. What has been wanting is the soul of poets, whose imaginative vision can clothe materialistic things with meaning and beauty.



In Frank Lloyd Wright America has such a poet. We should listen to what he sings.

It is now in the hands of an architect, Arnold Skow, who carefully remodeled its extensive facilities into several dwelling units without spoiling the original concept or beauty. But it may not always fare so well, for we are only just beginning to realize what treasures the recent past contains.

within the fabric of man's monuments and homes.

Now, perhaps, we might return to the most "arrogant" of our rhetorical questions: Why was it America that produced Frank Lloyd Wright, and, with him, probably the greatest domestic architecture in history?

Because the time and the place coincided with the man.

Democracy as an acceptable and workable form of government is a remarkably recent thing. We keep forgetting this. Only after the painful reconstruction following the Civil War, which lasted well past its formal end in 1865, did America begin to stand as a nation among other nations, which still had kings for rulers and the aristocratic system as their social philosophy. And only since 1918, or, better, since 1945, has America been acknowledged the leading country of the world in terms of the life of its people.

Between our beginning in 1776 and our emergence in 1945, we have been oppressed, first, by a colonial humility and, second, by a sense of cultural inferiority which still persists in some corners of America.

However, there were those few who saw in America something new under the sun. Whitman sang it; Wright has built it. They both needed an audience; they both found it—not, at first, among the millions, but among the tens and the hundreds. The millions were to follow, as is the nature of millions.

The last quarter of the Nineteenth Century witnessed a building expansion that can only be compared with our own postwar building boom. It is true that most of the houses going up were in the image of a half-forgotten England, as most houses today take shape in the image of a half-forgotten yesterday. Yet there were enough of those brave clients, who sought a suitably contemporary home to encourage our few great architects to persevere and eventually to triumph.

"In the Middle Ages," young right read in Victor Hugo, "who-er was born a poet became an chitect."

In America today, as in 1869, a an born a poet might easily be-me an architect. The man whose stiny it is to build beautiful ildings has a chance to build, he may not have had as well in,
y, Wales, were he born there.

Architecture (we'll risk stating bluntly) is the great art of Amer-, and it has the greatest and st tempting possibilities for its actice (10 million houses were ilt in the past ten years).

As the life of our people is the imary concern of our democratic ilosophy, so architecture for that e is now the primary expression our democratic culture.

thic cathedrals has this been ite so true. At no time in history s it been true for so many.

WHAT we are seeing in America is a return to the great, inte-ted periods before the Renais-ce, when architecture was the ntrolling, dominant art. Sculpe, painting and decoration then l willingly within its over-all em-ce. During the Renaissance it e way to the pre-eminence of nters and sculptors, who turned ir limited conceptions of space architecture and made it into -dimensional painting or, at st, three-dimensional sculpture.
Between the Renaissance and time, men born poets have bene painters (or writers). And Europe and other parts of the rld it is still so. Even those who uld practise a form of modern hitecture (such as Le Corbusier, o is basically a cubist painter
l plastician) conceive of architure as painting, or as abstract mposition in three dimensions, und which, but not in which,
n walks in admiration.

But the beginning of an art is discover how it differs from all er arts. So Picasso first underod what painting was, he tells when he discovered that it was sculpture—a discovery that manently eluded Michelangelo, chitect" of St. Peter's. Picasso epted the limitations of two di-nsions in painting and made the st of them. He was the first, in ct, to smash the 500-year-old d of Renaissance rules of per-ctive and depth-illusion, and, in process, liberated painting.

Some years before this, Frank yd Wright saw through the ne fallacies in Renaissance styles building (more sculpture than hitecture) and liberated archi- tecture from its 500 years of Renaissance imitations and derivatives.

Early in the 1900's, Wright made the great discovery that has permitted him to astound the world, again and again, today and most likely tomorrow, with the fruitfulness of his creativity. It was the discovery that freed architecture to be itself, that brought it back to reality, which is man's life itself, and made modern architecture possible:

He discovered the vital difference between sculpture and architecture, between volumes on the landscape and architectural space (he had already dismissed the painter's two-dimensional façades). He had been working toward it unconsciously, when suddenly it came to him full-blown in his design of the Unity Church in 1906. (Later he read it in Lao Tse, with an overwhelming feeling of recognition.)

The reality of a house, he discovered, was not in the exterior forms, as it is in sculpture, but in the space within, in the space enclosed, within which man walks and lives. It is this space which is architecture. It is this space which should form all buildings that aspire to architecture. Out of this historically important concept, Wright has created the enormous variety of his achievement.
And in all its variety, it is his particular sense of living space that gives unity. (Bruno Zevi is specially penetrating on this point in his article on page 254.)

Why was it an American who came up with a spatial point of view toward architecture?

We could answer by saying:
Here is an instance of the influence of the American frontier on architecture, the same frontier that contributed so hugely to the spacious attitude of the American pioneer toward life and himself. Mr.
Wright, on the other hand, tends to attribute it to the American political spirit, which led to the original Declaration of Independence and which speaks of man's inner depths and possibilities, of his right to freedom and spacious living. (In a sense, both explanations are the same.)

In any case, the spatial point of view in architecture is part of American optimism—call it romanticism—about man and about life.
It is part of our open society, as contrasted to the closed, hereditary society of most of Europe. Our classes mix easily. The children of one class rise readily into another.
We break through frontiers of space, of time, of power, because

AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?

What sort of future has Sang Gi, crippled by a bit of shrapnel? What are his chances, begging on the streets of Seoul, with his homemade crutches? He has no home, no parents, no schooling. He has a good and intelligent face, but—?

Is his future any business of mine? Should I be concerned with cripples and the needs and suffering of others? When I have enough to eat should I be worried because others don't, including little children? Should I care, when I was lucky enough to be born in America instead of India, where the majority of people do not get enough to eat and some are actually starving? What is the reason I was not born in Korea, like Sang Gi? There are still 35,000 homeless children in Korea. Why don't I live in a hut made of rubble, old tin cans and half rotten scraps of wood in Southern Italy, Hong Kong or in a crowded Austrian refugee camp? Why don't I happen to be a man with a job in Calcutta, working steady every day for long hours, who sleeps in the streets every night because my job does not pay me enough to share even a single room with a dozen other persons—a room without a stitch of furniture or protection from flies, swarming with bed bugs and without any sanitary arrangements whatever?

I am a Christian. Does that make me my brother's keeper? When my stomach is full must I be concerned about others, whose stomachs are empty? Must I? Am I compelled to think about these others? Or is it just, God helping me, that I want to think about them and because I have a heart, desire to help them?

No gift is too small to give a child a bit of bread. Or you can have some pitiful, homeless and hungry child brought into a Christian Children's Fund orphanage-school and be given a decent chance in life by "adopting" a child. The cost, $10.00 a month, is the same in all of the following 28 different countries: Austria, Borneo, Brazil, Burma, Finland, Formosa, France, Free China, Greece, Hong Kong, India, Indochina, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Korea, Lapland, Lebanon, Macao, Malaya, Mexico, Okinawa, Pakistan, Philippines, Puerto Rico, United States and Western Germany.

of our heritage, our climate of self-confidence, our largeness of spirit.

So why not break through the walls of our homes? Why not open our houses to the nature we love, and in which we have always trusted? We are big. We are a continent. We are not an island surrounded by water or hostile neighbors. Our land nourishes us. Why withdraw from it into tight boxes up on disdainful stilts, as in some modern European architecture?

When we understand this attitude on the part of Americans, we realize how Wright emerged from America. And we understand his violent reaction to that type of modern architecture which misuses the nature of materials, of construction and of his own forms, in the name of a style that is nothing more than another in the long list of historical clichés.

BEFORE venturing on architectural designs, he says to architects, go deep into the nature of architecture and man. Discover for yourself the bedrock principles that underlie all of life, and then you can go on, like nature herself, to create all the living forms you need for all the houses you will be called on to design. (See Wright's "Faith in Your Own Individuality," page 270.) You won't have to copy the forms of the Greeks, the Romans, the Louis' or of Frank Lloyd Wright. You will find yourself working out the forms necessary for whatever problems you meet. You will find the creative solution in the problem itself, because you will be applying principles as if and always for the first time.

Your work will have style without being a copy of any particular style. And America will have houses as distinctive as its individuals and its regions, members of the same family but with forms, faces and functions of their own. America, in other words, will have a living, growing, organic architecture for its living, glowing conception of itself.

It is here that Wright speaks for America. It is in his own joyous acceptance of life and life's one law, that of change, that he represents us abroad, as well as at home. "I have learned in my lifetime," he told an English audience not too long ago, "that there is only one trust worthy of any man, and that is trust in life itself. The firm belief that life is, that you cannot cheat it nor can you defeat it." Work with it and only then will you achieve an architecture, a culture, that is a "great living creative spirit which, from generation to generation, from age to age, proceeds, persists, creates, according to the nature of man and his circumstances, as they both change."

WHERE did this confidence come from? From a youth unmistakably American. From a manhood no less so. If there are some critics among us who hesitate to call Wright characteristically American, certainly there is no Englishman who would feel any doubt. He would instantly see in Wright the force, the freedom, the largeness of spirit (it is that fundamentally) which he somehow identifies with America, as contrasted to the economy, the classic rules, the tight definitions of his own continental culture.

Returning to the sixteen-year-old Wright, about to enter the University of Wisconsin, we return to an American farm boy:

Those farm days (Mr. Wright tells us in his autobiography) had left their mark on him in a self-confidence in his own strength called courage. Muscles hard. Step springing. Sure-footed and fingers quick as thought and quick with thought. Mind buoyant with optimism. Optimism that came through seeing sunshine follow clouds and rain, working out success succeeding failure.

It had come to him self-consciously, out of his daily endeavors, as an underlying sense of the essential balance of forces in nature. Something in the nature of an inner experience had come to him that was to make a sense of this supremacy of interior order like a religion to him. He was to take refuge in it and grow in it. Besides, coming sixteen, for several years the youth had been doing a man's work. He had learned how to do much and do much well, and to do most of it happily, feeling himself master where he would. That gave him a whip hand.

* * * *

And the man? Here is what Mr. Wright told the lords, ladies and gentlemen of England, knowing full well the effect of it on his effete audience:

"You see," he said, "architecture is not simply a drawingboard matter with us; it is a way of life. [A movie of Mr. Wright at work

th his apprentices had just been own.] By doing this outdoor ork, the boys, and some of the rls, too, get the nature of ground o their systems and find sweat their brows excellent for pro- oting ideas. When I am myself eary of ideas and seem to be get- g a little stale, I go out and und stone on the new roads, rk on the buildings [Mr. right's Taliesin homes in Wiscon- and Arizona are constantly be- g added to] or go out in the lds. I come back refreshed, bet- able to carry on . . .

"As I go back to my home [thus concluded his London talks], back to Taliesin trying to put ese simple things of the spiritual e we have been discussing into jective concrete form on earth, ing to bring out subjective truth make forms and patterns for ing more worthy of life, I can ly leave with you what I have en saying these past several eve- gs to help overcome the terriffic tural (architectural) lag be- een what you have and what you ld have. . . .

"At least, I have brought you s message: What we call organic chitecture in America is no mere hetic cult or fashion, but an ual movement based upon a pro- found idea of a new integrity of human life wherein art, religion and science are one, form and function seen as one—for of such is American democracy."

It is this vision of Frank Lloyd Wright, even at eighty-six, we are sure, pounding stone in a road and building, ever building with his men, testing the strength of materials and himself, exercising the American's ten-fingered grasp of reality, that remains in one's mind.

Here is a man trying to extract all life has to offer, not trying to reduce it to the minimum in the name of an esthetic. Here is a man who says, after William Blake, exuberance is beauty, not less is more; a man so busy creating new homes, new, living forms for new, changing conditions, that he cannot stop to eternally refine and over refine one of them (in the Mies van der Rohe fashion, for example), reducing it to something that anyone can copy and anyone can teach anyone to copy.

Here is a man, in other words, who constantly escapes definition and academic formulas, and so irritates the academic mind; who does not even imitate himself and who is sharp in his criticism of those who do. Here is a man who would liberate architecture despite most architects, and, let us not forget, despite those of us who are still building 19th-century houses for mid-20th-century America.

When we speak of Wright's liberation of architecture, as we have so often, we have in mind the extraordinary sweep of his more than sixty years of work. Various articles, accompanied by many striking pictures, show the reader of this issue how effective that work has been in providing a beautiful life in a beautiful environment, a beauty of life equal to the meaning of America.

For the goal of Mr. Wright has always been buildings for man, not the creation of arbitrary forms, however interesting in themselves. "Human use and comfort," he has written, "should not be taxed to pay dividends on any designer's idiosyncrasy. Human use and comfort should have intimate possession of every interior."

MR. WRIGHT'S freedom—and the freedom he encourages—has always been founded on principles as sound structurally as they are humanistically. Too few people, or critics, know that he was trained as an engineer, that he combines in his work all the quality of American engineering technology, such as the Brooklyn, Whitestone and Golden Gate Bridges, with the exquisite artistry of a Mozart and a Beethoven (to whom he might best be compared). Too few people, incidentally, realize that many architects, among them the most publicized, can barely work out the "conception" of a building, generally leaving it to the engineers to make it work.

When Mr. Wright speaks of the nature of materials, he speaks with a firsthand knowledge unequalled and unparalleled in the history of architecture. (For one thing, no other period had so many.) This knowledge comes out of his experience in working directly with them, out of an openness to their possibilities that we can only call American, so much is it a part of the whole Wright story and of our own, and out of a creative engineering ability that has, again and again, confounded even America's enterprising engineers when first presented to them.

Such was the case with Wright's "Romeo and Juliet" water tower for his aunts in 1896. Experts prophesied collapse. It is still standing.

Such was the case with Wright' Imperial Hotel in Tokyo, finishe in 1922. He wanted to construc a sort of "floating" foundation, an make a building so balanced tha it could ride out the waves of a earthquake, returning to norma without damage. He had to buil it without a permit. It alone witl stood the great earthquake of 192 while all about it crashed to th ground and burned.

Such was the case with th Johnson Administration building (There is a picture of it on pag 257). Wright wanted to use dendriform shaft, a lily-like pillar to be both support and roof. Th engineers said it would never carr the load required. So it was teste in public. The shaft was set ou in a field, and a crane dumpe loads of cement bags on the ex tended flat floor of the top of th shaft. Let Mr. Wright describe it

"The crane kept swinging an dumping, swinging and dumping until the sun went down. We wer still there waiting for collapse Long ago any requirement by th commission had been passed an doubled. Still the heap up ther on top kept growing.

"The sight was incredible. Th police had taken charge and rope the populace from the vicinity o that heroic slender stem, standin up there a graceful thing on tip toe, standing straight and true, un til sixty tons, instead of the twelv tons required, were on top of shaft nine inches in diameter a the tip on the ground . . .

"No more load could be put o without sliding off, so I gave th word to break it . . . A lateral pus against the shaft brought the enor mous overload tumbling to th ground causing a tremor felt t the surrounding streets. The shaf still unbroken, lay on the ground The spreading head had broke off. The commissioner disappeared Their silence gave consent."

ALL his life, and in all his work Wright has been building an testing, but testing before buildin He has experimented endlessl with a material or an idea befor venturing on the building itself.

The result? A fantastic list o engineering and building firsts (i not firsts, then early and success ful pioneering experiences): floo heating; concrete block used do mestically for exteriors and inte riors; reinforced, cantilever con struction for houses; air condition ng; corner windows and strip win-lows; and many more.

There will be even more, one eels sure, for the story of Frank Lloyd Wright is: To be continued.
'o be continued by himself out of he perpetual springs of his genius.
'o be continued by the Taliesin 'ellowship, and by those who have ome directly or indirectly under is inspiring example. But, above ll, to be continued by America, o long as it is true to itself.

One has a strong surety about ie future of American architec-ire, particularly after a visit to Ir. Wright's Taliesin home in Wis-onsin. This great house, too is:
) be continued—like all growing, rganic things. It is part of the ow rolling hills of the pastoral ene, as he would have all Amer-an architecture belong to its site.
has great form, but a form that as not been frozen forever. In-ead it reaches along the ground ith the beauty of a spreading ee, and fills us with the same nse of lively growth.

All through the pages of this onth's HOUSE BEAUTIFUL the ader can catch glimpses of vari-is rooms and various exteriors of aliesin. It is far too large to be ld as a whole, even in an issue ntirely devoted to it. But, yet, in the occasional picture, we trust, the reader catches the meaning of
Frank Lloyd Wright:

American architecture can have a character, integrity and great beauty that go beyond the creations of other ages—the Parthenon, the Egyptian temples, even the Gothic cathedrals—for it will be created for a new life, a new democratic spirit and concept, a new civilization and culture in which greatness will be sought and found in the life of people everywhere.

In his work, and especially in Taliesin, his home in Wisconsin, we catch a vision of what our own homes might be: great structures that marry us nobly to the ground, that offer a rich background and framework for our developing culture, a day-to-day contact with a source of integrity, purpose and honesty, a place of sheltering peace, serenity and fulfillment.

* * * *

"The great advent of an architectural genius may startle us unexpectedly in the twentieth century, as Dante startled the thirteenth." When sixteen-year-old Wright read this, he knew what Victor Hugo meant.

So, at last, do we—wherein the triumph of American architecture.

The Writings of Frank Lloyd Wright

It has become a truism for readers of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL that architecture can neither be adequately photographed nor completely described. It must be seen in the flesh.

Some people, whose only knowledge of the architecture of Frank Lloyd Wright is in the reduced, two-dimensional form of a photograph, are clearly at a disadvantage when it comes to fully understanding the value of his great work. And often they may hasten to quick, unfounded conclusions as to its validity, for—we can never say it too often—it has been our experience that the richer the architectural spaces and structural forms, the more difficult it is to reproduce them in pictures. There is something about the presence of a house, as of a person, that escapes the photographer, as Mr. Wright himself has remarked.

Since his architecture is conceived primarily in spatial terms, and not in two-dimensional facades, it becomes even more difficult for the photographer. To know the architecture of Frank Lloyd Wright is to walk through it, to sit in it, and, if possible, to live in it. There is really no substitute. All else prepares us for the actual visit, deepens our understanding of his buildings when we see them and gives us some basis for comparison with what we've already seen, but it does not give us the physical reality of his contribution.

However, to know the meaning and philosophy of Mr. Wright, insofar as they can be separated from his architecture, has been made possible by his own numerous writings. So fruitful are they, indeed, that several architects have told us that his books have meant more to them than seeing his buildings. What they meant was that in his writings they could finally discover the principles he stands for, which are greater even than examples of his work.

With this we are profoundly sympathetic, since it is Mr. Wright's principles that we have been trying to explain in story after story in this issue. We too have turned to his various books for fuller explanation of his philosophy and architectural values, and have frequently quoted from them, as you have already found out for yourself.

By far the richest vein we struck was in Mr. Wright's An Autobiography, originally written in 1932, revised and expanded in 1943. It is published by Duell, Sloan and Pearce, New York for $9. We have all read it repeatedly, and with delight.

The autobiography covers all the years of his life—

from 1869 to about 1942. Included in it are virtually all his major statements on the nature of organic architecture, of materials, of the site, of structure, and so on. It is written in a style that is sometimes belligerent, sometimes apocalyptic, sometimes Victorian, sometimes disheartened, but always with a spirit and a courage that surges up dramatically and forcefully. For those of us who recognize the triumph of his heroic career, it has a happy ending.

If there were only one book by Mr. Wright which you should read, let it be his Autobiography. Whether you are interested in architecture or not, it is as much part of burgeoning American culture as the autobiographies of Benjamin Franklin and Henry Adams, for instance.

And, if you should wish to go on to more of his books, perhaps you should read them in this sequence:

The Future of Architecture, Horizon Press, New York, 1953, $7.50.

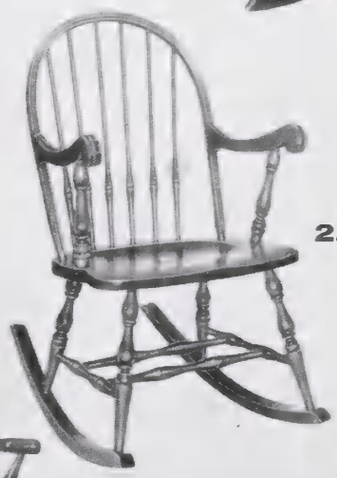
The Natural House, Horizon Press, 1954, $6.50.

When Democracy Builds, University of Chicago Press, Chicago, 1951, $5.00.

The Autobiography is not illustrated: the other three listed directly above are, and the illustrations add a great deal to the text.

Those who saw—and enjoyed—Mr. Wright on television, discussing his architectural philosophy one memorable day in May 1953, will find the text of his comments, plus photos of his hands demonstrating a point or two, in The Future of Architecture. Possibly more interesting is the record of his four evenings of talks in London in 1939. Here the reader will find many answers to his questions concerning Mr. Wright's attitudes toward the past as well as toward the future of architecture. And, read in connection with When Democracy Builds (reviewed below), it will provide better understanding of Wright's social philosophy.

The Natural House, in one way, fills in the years between 1942, where the Autobiography ended, and 1954. But, more significantly, it strikes off in a new direction: toward the problem of houses of moderate cost, a problem that has held Mr. Wright's attention for many years. The reader will find here repetition of now familiar principles (if he has read the two previous books) as applied to small homes.



When Democracy Builds is the most completely thought-through statement Mr. Wright has made on the central issue of our day: how America should live —in great cities or in small communities, in single houses or in skyscraper apartment buildings? His attitude toward all this has been described in the article on page 248, "The Character of the Site." In this book he blueprints his arguments for "Broadacre City" with specific building plans and community schemes, showing how we might go on to a greater, more vital democracy by beginning with the individual home on its own piece of ground. The most difficult of his books to follow, it may well be his most important in the long run of American history.

Taken together, all these works are monuments in print by one of the most monumental men of our time.

Mr. Wright has designed two sizes of hexagonal tables, one lower than the other. They can be grouped and re-grouped in endless combinations, depending on situation and need.

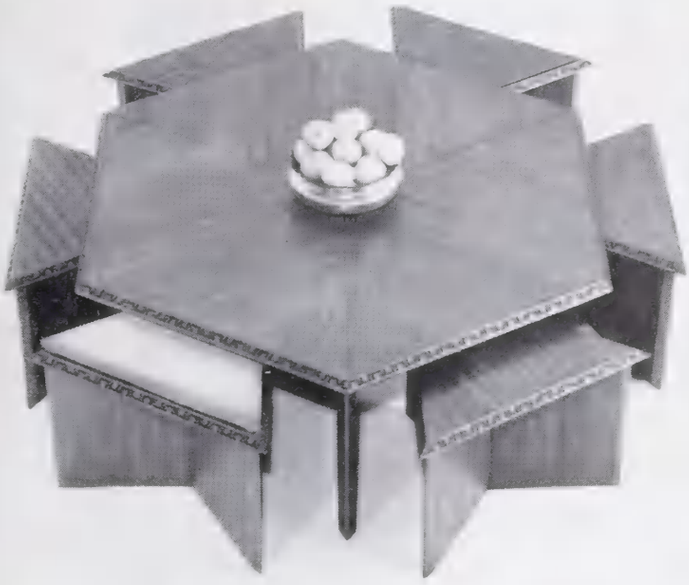
And now that architecture has again become the dominant art of America and the living room has become more than ever the great core of many activities, to have Frank Lloyd Wright design furnishings for the general homemaker, rather than for special clients, seems a development that is logical and long overdue. We welcome the entry of his great talents and principles into the important commercial field of home furnishings available for all to buy. We understand that what we are showing here is only the beginning and that more are sure to follow with these five (and other) manufacturers.

Mr. Wright has a well-developed philosophy of furnishings. He believes that they should be sympathetic to each other and to the architecture of the house without in any way being a suite. This will give a home greater unity and create a feeling of repose. The sense should be one of integration and harmony rather than of exact repetition.



His cushioned stools nest under tables, as do some of his smaller tables under larger ones. They group well together, but each piece also looks well alone, when separated from the others.

Mr. Wright feels that furniture must be able to group and regroup in many ways in order to meet the many situations demanded by today's living room. The groups must be handsome, for they will always be a visible and important part of a room. In fact, he regards the making of such compositions as one of the primary goals in home furnishing. Consequently he has designed tables in circles, triangles, squares and hexagons that mix or match in fascinating combinations.

Where there is a lack of architectural distinction, such groupings become even more important, as does the design distinction of each piece. This latter factor played an important part in the character and pattern he has given the furniture and fabrics he has just designed.

Believing that ornament, when integral with the thing itself, can be a means of enrichment, he has designed a striking molding which decorates and accents the structural lines of the furniture. For him it enhances and expresses the way the furniture is made and so is not a superfluous decoration for the sake of decoration alone.

Believing also that furniture, which is to hold the weight of a person or of considerable storage, should look substantial and fully capable of its job, he has designed solid-looking pieces. (He has no patience with a current, quixotic type of design which would give all furniture a "floating" look.) They offer the eye a sense of security and safety. Heavy pieces rest in sturdy, well-framed low cradles. Tables have architectural bases.

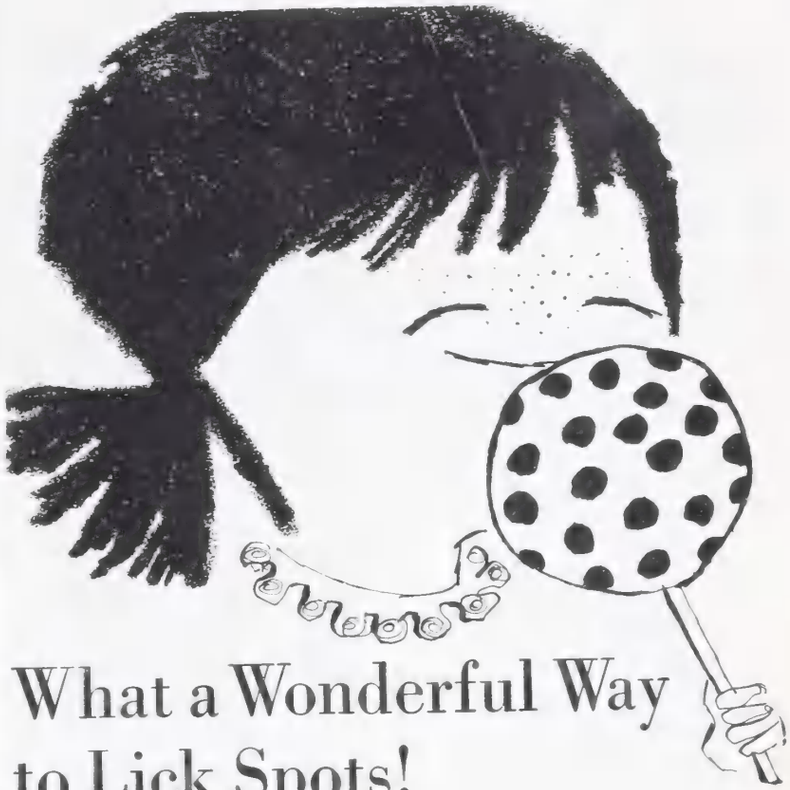
In short, the Wright furniture has a consistency that one would expect from his work. It strikes a new note at a time when furniture design seems to have paused for a moment or two of quiet reflection.



There is, and there should be, an architectural quality to his furniture, a strong feeling of structural integrity and form, which is emphasized by a flowering of the edges in carved molding. There is a richness that recalls some of the fine English furniture of the past—a richness that is contemporary—not a copy of traditional styles.

The richest effect, however, is not so much in individual pieces as in the grouping of them together. Similarly, Mr. Wright's houses must be seen in totality, not as separate rooms, for they are planned as an organic composition. His sense of oneness, of integration, of wholeness, is incomparable in our time. It may not be the wholeness or integration sought by everyone for himself, but it is a perfectly valid and honorable one. Just as Mr. Wright's architecture is a matter of personal choice for one's own home, so, obviously, is his furniture. They both are Wrightian—and that is saying a great deal.

As for the fabrics he has designed, Mr. Wright believes that soft goods in a room can be a means of liveliness and color, and of individuality, especially where architectural character is somewhat lacking. He believes that such soft goods should have a tapestry-like richness and texture, which you can see demonstrated in his own pattern of triangles for draperies and wallpapers on page 283, and again in his patterns of circles and arcs on page 285. All these designs are conceived as two-dimensional surface patterns. They have no illusion of perspective. They are meant to lie flat visually or against any plane surface.

There is an integration of Wright's furniture with the richness of his fabric patterns. Note, for instance, on page 286, how well his furniture goes with the complicated figure of the Persian carpet underneath. They go as well with his fabrics and newly designed rugs. Thus, together, they offer an ensemble of luxury at reasonable prices, perhaps a new system of furnishing an entire room with unity and variation in furniture, fabrics and rugs.

Completing the Taliesin Ensemble, Mr. Wright has chosen 36 colors for custom mixing by the Martin-Senour Company. Twenty-seven of these colors are extremely useful for covering large areas and surfaces. Nine serve for sparkling accent purposes. They are soft, warm, pleasant and very easy to use. In this they are completely in harmony with all the other Wright furnishings.

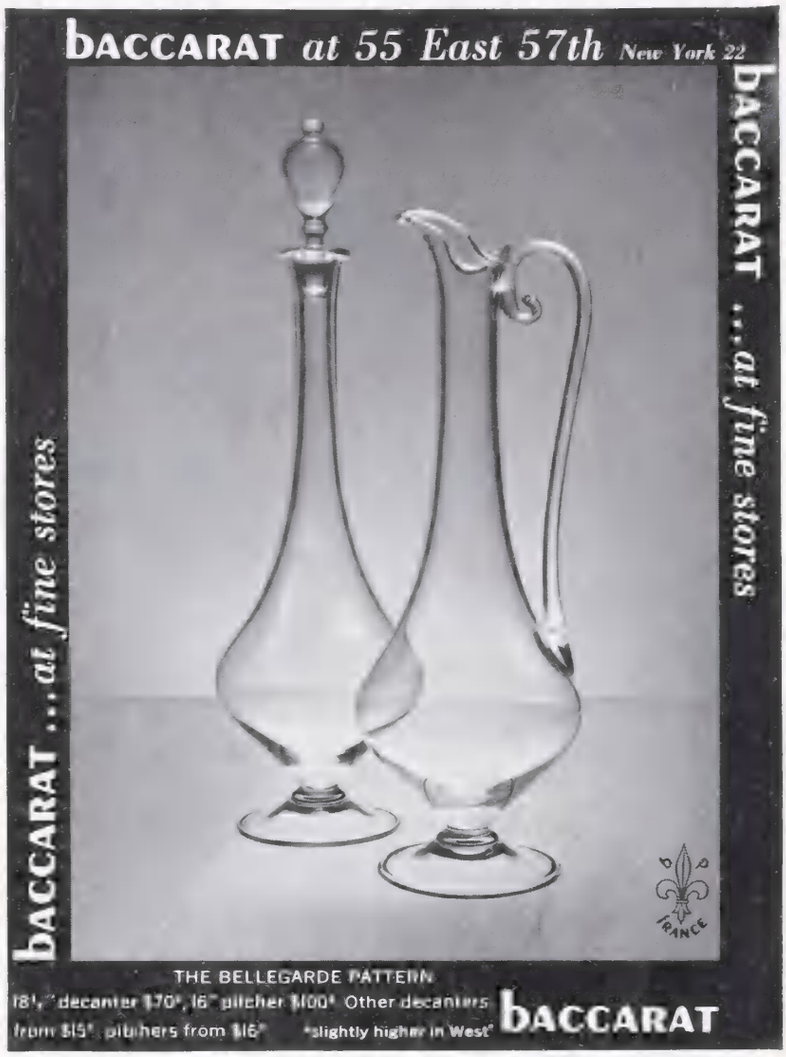
These two pictures illustrate the great versatility of Wright's furniture. Above you see a movable bookcase atop a chest of drawers. Photo below demonstrates how it can be used as a room divider when resting on a low base, such as a cocktail table or simply on the floor itself.

Quotations from Frank Lloyd Wright



"We have a civilization that has been provided with the grandest tool box ever seen. No Greek, no Roman, no member of any civilization on earth ever had handed to him the tool box we have. The tools we have to work with, superb, magnificent science has provided us."

"Whether people are conscious of it or not, they actually derive countenance and sustenance from the 'atmosphere' of the things they live in or with. They are rooted in them just as a plant is in the soil in which it is planted."

"The use of the word poetry is a dangerous word. Heretofore I have used the word 'ornament' to avoid confusion or escape the passing prejudice. But here, now, ornament is in its place. Ornament meaning not only surface qualified by human imagination but imagination giving natural pattern to structure. Perhaps this phrase says it all without further explanation. . . . So it will be found with all great work—with the paintings of Velasquez and Frans Hals, with Gothic architecture. They all have organic character."

Wright as a

Wright's love of nature and his sensitive reaction to the land on which a house is built has made him, in effect, a landscape architect.

Because he believes that the site in its natural state should be preserved, and that the house upon it should belong to its circumstance as beautifully and naturally as the trees and the rocks belong to the spot on which they stand, he always plans for the whole property. Since one of his goals is to wed the house to the land on which it stands, his designing certainly always begins with the ground, and often with the horizon—if a view is one of the inherent characteristics of the property.

This concern for everything outside and around the house causes him to use plants as the transitional means between structure and nature. It also leads him to the designing of plant boxes integral to the structure, both outside and inside. He brings the garden inside and, in reverse of the plan, takes the structure out into the garden in all kinds of ways.

Frequently the floor layout of the interior rooms continues on outdoors and is expressed in planting, paving or ornamental (Please turn to page 344)

Landscape Architect

Native desert plants are used as the main landscape material in Mr. & Mrs. Wright's winter home near Phoenix. Since they live there only five or six months a year, the planting has to be self-maintaining. Plants gathered from the surrounding desert, when treated as though important and beautiful, suddenly are important and beautiful. A magnificent palos verde tree grows beside living-room door.

Wright's structures flow into the surrounding land, forming planting boxes to receive whatever will grow best in them—here, ferns where sun shines only a few hours a day.

plant boxes. (See the article on the Coonley house entitled, "The Symphonic Poem of a Great House," on page 272, for the repetition of the house motif outdoors.) Thus he welds the outdoors and indoors into one thing: a pleasant environment for man to move in and to live in.

He decorates the outdoors in the same way and with the same attitudes as the interiors: He wants them both to be pleasant to see under changing light, to be comfortable to sit in surrounded by things of beauty. He insists that it is "not the look of it, but the use of it" that he is always after. An outside observer, however, cannot help but note that "the look of it" seems to be well taken care of, as a part of Mr. Wright's attitude toward the "use of it."

As long as 50 years ago, Frank Lloyd Wright was building up masonry plant beds under big glass windows, so the plants would be close to the eye and their foliage would trail down, ornamenting the masonry and tying the house visually into the earth. This has since become a badly misused cliché in the hands of imitative designers and builders, who don't know how to integrate such a detail with the rest of the structure. But it is still beautiful when done by the master himself: you forget the bad copies, which have almost made you reject the whole idea, when you see the originals.

Mr. Wright can handle a garden for a palace as easily as one for a tiny house. He can and has turned out garden complexes with formal gardens, entrance-courtyard gardens, private bedroom gardens, service courts and drying yards. But he can also take a small scrap (Please turn the page)

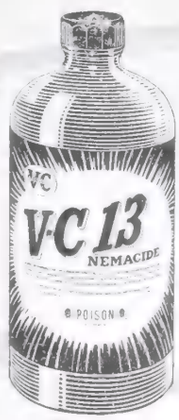
Are nematodes your underground enemy?



ARE YOU WONDERING why your shrubs, grass and trees do not flourish despite watering, fertilization, insect and disease control and other good care?

Your problem may be nematodes, the tiny worms (too small to be seen by the naked eye) that infest the soil and damage the roots of plants. Nematodes are now prevalent in many sections of the country. Plants cannot grow properly when roots are attacked by nematodes.

Until recently, nematodes have been hard to kill. Most chemicals that killed nematodes also killed plants. But the amazing new discovery, V-C 13, has destroyed these microscopic worms without harm to growing plants.

All you have to do is soak the soil under plants to full root depth with liquid V-C 13 mixed with water. V-C 13 kills nematodes and stays in the soil to discourage future attacks. With this protection, roots recover and your plants make new growth unhampered by nematodes.

In tests, one simple treatment with V-C 13 has killed nematodes and helped trees, grass and shrubs to recover full growth and beauty as healthy new roots were formed. Perhaps nematodes are your underground enemy. Protection is easy and economical. Get V-C 13 now!

V-C 13 Nemacide comes in four handy sizes: 8-ounce bottle, quart bottle, gallon jug and 5-gallon drum. The 8-ounce bottle treats 50 to 100 square feet of soil. Full directions on container.

V-C 13 is so new your dealer may not have it yet, but keep asking, or write us for the name of your nearest supplier and for free literature on control of nematodes. Dealer inquiries invited.

WRIGHT AS A LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT

of land and with his skill make it into a little jewel of an estate.

He has always been very realistic about maintenance, since he has for so long had to maintain two big homes of his own in two distinct climates. (And, no matter who you are, there are never enough hands to keep up with the necessary grooming of lush nature.) This realism has led him to rely heavily on native plants: trees and shrubs indigenous to the region and, preferably, to the actual site: natives or plants which grow like natives year after year with little attention.
